DECLARATION OF ROBERT SPITZER

I, Robert Spitzer, declare under penalty of perjury that the following is true and correct:

1. I have been asked by the California Department of Justice to render an opinion on the history of firearms restrictions enacted in the early twentieth century, addressing machine guns (fully automatic firearms), semiautomatic firearms, and ammunition feeding devices, and tracing those regulations back to earlier hardware and use restrictions on other types of weapons enacted in the nineteenth century and earlier.

2. This declaration is based on my own personal knowledge, research, and experience, and if I am called to testify as a witness, I could and would testify competently to the truth of the matters discussed in this declaration.

3. I have been retained by the California Department of Justice to render expert opinions in this case. I am being compensated at a rate of $500 per hour.

BACKGROUND AND QUALIFICATIONS

4. I am a Distinguished Service Professor of Political Science Emeritus at the State University of New York at Cortland. I earned my Ph.D. in Government from Cornell University. I reside in Williamsburg, Virginia. A copy of my curriculum vitae is attached as Exhibit A to this Declaration.

5. I have been studying and writing about gun policy for over thirty years. My first publication on the subject appeared in 1985. Since then, I have published six books and over one hundred articles, papers, and essays on gun policy. My expertise includes the history of gun laws, gun policy in American

1 politics, and related historical, legal, political, and 2 criminological issues. My book, The Politics of Gun Control, has 3 been in print since its initial publication in 1995. It examines 4 firearms policy in the United States through the lenses of 5 history, law, politics, and criminology. The eighth edition of 6 the book was published in 2021 by Routledge Publishers. My two 7 most recent books on gun policy, Guns across America (Oxford
8 University Press, 2015) and The Gun Dilemma (Oxford University 9 Press, 2023), both deal extensively with the study of historical 10 gun laws. I am frequently interviewed and quoted in the national 11 and international media on gun-related matters. For over twenty 12 years, I have been a member of the National Rifle Association and 13 of Brady (formerly, the Brady Campaign to Prevent Gun Violence).

14 6. I have provided written testimony as an expert witness in 15 Worman v. Healey, No. 1:17-10107-WGY (D. Mass.), which concerned 16 the constitutionality of Massachusetts' restrictions on assault 17 weapons, and in Miller v. Bonta, No. 3:19-cv-01537-BEN-JLB (S.D.
18 Cal.), which concerns the constitutionality of California's 19 restrictions on assault weapons. I have co-authored amicus 20 briefs in numerous cases, including Nordyke v. King, U.S. Court 21 of Appeals, Ninth Circuit, 319 F.3d 1185 (2003); Republic of Iraq

16 OPINIONS

17 I. INTRODUCTION

18 8. The current controversy surrounding legislative efforts 19 to restrict semi-automatic assault weapons and large capacity 20 magazines would seem to be a purely contemporary matter, 21 responding to the modern phenomenon of mass shootings. The 22 effort to restrict such weapons was sparked in part by a shooting 23 at an elementary school in Stockton, California in 1989, when a 24 man armed with an AK-47, including two large capacity magazines, 25 and a handgun killed five children and wounded thirty-three 26 others. Later that year, California enacted the first assault 27 weapons ban in the country. Five years later, Congress enacted a 28 limited ten year ban on assault weapons, which included

1 restrictions on large-capacity magazines (LCMs) (defined as 2 magazines capable of holding more than ten rounds of 3 ammunition).¹ The federal large-capacity magazine ban did not 4 ban the possession of large-capacity magazines, nor did it 5 prohibit the transfer of magazines lawfully owned prior to the 6 1994 ban. In 2000, California enacted a similar ban on large-7 capacity magazines, though it prohibited the transfer of such 8 magazines. As of this writing, fourteen states plus the District 9 of Columbia restrict LCMs.² These jurisdictions represent more 10 than 115 million individuals, or approximately 34.5% of the U.S.
11 population.³

12 9. These recent efforts to restrict assault weapons and 13 LCMs are simply the latest chapter in a centuries-long effort to 18 30. The fifteen jurisdictions are California, Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware, the District of Columbia, Hawaii, 19 Illinois, Maryland, Massachusetts, New Jersey, New York, Oregon,

Rhode Island, Vermont, and Washington. With three exceptions
(Colorado, Delaware, and Vermont), all of these restrictions 20 impose a ten-round limit on magazines, as did the 1994 federal law. Hawaii's restrictions apply to only handguns. The Illinois 21 law limits magazines for long guns to ten rounds, and handguns to fifteen. Oregon voters approved by referendum a ten-round LCM 22 limit in November 2022, but that law is under court challenge:

estimates). The total population in these jurisdictions is 27 estimated to be over 115,000,000 out of a U.S. total of about 333,000,000. In 2022, the U.S. House of Representatives passed a 28 renewed nationwide assault weapons ban with LCM restrictions.

1 protect the public from harm and to dampen weapons-related 2 criminality. The pattern of criminal violence and concerns for 3 public safety leading to weapons restrictions is not new; in 4 fact, it can be traced back to the Nation's beginnings. While 5 the particular weapons technologies and public safety threats 6 have changed over time, governmental responses to the dangers 7 posed by certain weapons have remained constant. Current 8 restrictions on assault weapons and detachable ammunition
9 magazines are historically grounded. They are part of a pattern 10 in America's history of legislative restrictions on particular 11 weapons stretching back centuries.

12 II. REGULATORY HISTORY OF FULLY AUTOMATIC AND SEMI-AUTOMATIC FIREARMS
13 (EARLY TWENTIETH CENTURY)

14 10. A clear example of this historical pattern is provided 15 by early twentieth-century restrictions related to fully 16 automatic firearms. While weapons capable of firing rounds in 17 rapid succession can be traced to guns of the late nineteenth and 18 early twentieth centuries, like the hand-cranked, multi-barreled 19 Gatling gun which could fire up to 200 rounds per minute,⁴ it and 20 its successors were military weapons designed to be used in 21 combat and fired from a tripod or similar supporting apparatus, 22 owing to the Gatling gun's size and weight. Strictly speaking, 23 guns like the Gatling gun were not fully automatic as they did

24 _____
25 ⁴ The Gatling gun, a manually operated, hand-cranked machine 26 gun, was adopted by the U.S. Army in 1866, and was utilized in 27 warfare against Native Americans and the Spanish-American War of 28 1898. Richard W. Stewart, American Military History, Vol. I: The U.S. Army and the Forging of a Nation, 1775-1917 (Washington,

1 not fire a continuous stream of bullets while depressing a gun 2 trigger. The development of a fully automatic machine gun for 3 battlefield use, capable of firing all of its rounds from a 4 single barrel and with a single trigger pull, came to fruition
5 during World War I, and to devastating effect, where tripod-6 mounted machine guns on the battlefield, like the Maxim, which 7 initially fired 200-400 rounds per minute but later 400-600
8 rounds per minute from a gun weighing roughly 100 pounds.⁵

9 11. Out of World War I came a practical, lighter-weight, 10 reliable, hand-held, fully automatic weapon: the Thompson 11 submachine gun, widely known as the Tommy gun. Though it was 12 developed for use in World War I, it came too late in the war to 13 have much effect. Its inventor, John Thompson, patented his .45
14 caliber gun in 1920.⁶ The Tommy gun was initially unregulated 15 after World War I and made available for civilian purchase, 16 typically with either a 20-30 round stick magazine or a 100-round 17 drum magazine. (The U.S. military showed little interest in 18 acquiring the weapon, as the military largely demobilized and 19 contracted sharply in size after the war.⁷) It was only at this

1 point—in the early 1920s—that such hand-held weapons operated 2 reliably, were made available to civilians, and began to 3 circulate in society,⁸ though sales in the early 1920s were 4 sluggish. By 1925, Thompson’s marketing company, Auto Ordnance, 5 had sold only about 3,000 of the 15,000 it had manufactured up to 6 this point, including to police forces and individuals.⁹ This 7 pattern of anemic sales typified the gun’s commercial trajectory:
 8 “Despite its initial publicity and later notoriety, the Thompson 9 submachine gun was a failure from the start.”¹⁰ This was 10 especially true for police forces, to whom Thompson and his 11 company marketed the gun aggressively, even when criminals found 12 the gun appealing. “As a criminal’s weapon, the Tommygun was an 13 unqualified success. As a police weapon, it was such a flop that 14 many law-enforcement officials wished sincerely that it has never 15 come off the drawing board.”¹¹ For example, after the St.
 16 Valentine’s Day massacre, a representative of Auto-Ordnance 17 visited Chicago police captain John Stege to offer assistance.
 18 Captain Stege “practically ran him out of the office. . . . It 19 was Stege’s opinion that not even the police should be armed with 20 machine guns,” an opinion shared “by many other lawmen in the 21 country.”¹² Another police chief explained why: “It is not

1 possible for a police officer to open a machine gun up on a 2 crowded street . . . because you are going to kill possibly ten 3 innocent people to one criminal.”¹³ Poor military and law 4 enforcement sales forced the company to “peddle the new gun in 5 peacetime” by trying “to think up something else it might be good 6 for.” Their conclusion was to market the gun as “good for 7 anything.”¹⁴

8 12. Before the early 1920s, these weapons were unregulated 9 for the obvious reason that they did not exist or were not 10 circulating widely in society. When they did begin to circulate, 11 however, their uniquely destructive capabilities rapidly became 12 apparent, especially to the emergent Prohibition-fueled gangster 13 organizations of the 1920s. Another automatic weapon developed 14 for World War I was the Browning Automatic Rifle (BAR). It fired 15 a .30-06 caliber round, could receive a 20-round box magazine, 16 and could fire up to 650 rounds per minute. The BAR first 17 appeared on the battlefield in 1918.¹⁵ It, too, made its way into 18 civilian life and found favor among criminals and gangsters in 19 the 1920s and early 1930s.¹⁶ Like contemporary assault weapons outlaws Bonnie and Clyde, for example. Christian Oord, “The 1 and their use in mass shootings, guns like the Tommy gun and the 2 BAR were actually used relatively infrequently by criminals

3 generally, but when they were used, they exacted a devastating 4 toll and garnered extensive national attention, such as their use
5 in the infamous St. Valentine's Day massacre in Chicago in 1929.¹⁷

6 13. Reports and exposés, juxtaposed with lurid and 7 sensational accounts of Tommy gun criminality, built pressure on 8 the states to enact anti-machine gun laws (at least 32 states did 9 so between 1925 and 1933; see Exhibits B and D), and also put 10 pressure on Congress to act. A long-stalled bill in Congress to 11 restrict the interstate shipment of guns received renewed 12 interest and support in 1926, eventually leading to congressional 13 enactment of the Mailing of Firearms Act of 1927, a limited 14 measure that failed to restrict interstate handgun shipment 15 because it did not affect non-Postal Service shipments. From 16 1926 on, news stories were filled with the kind of sensational 17 gangster-related stories that led to the Tommy gun being labeled 18 the weapon that "made the Twenties roar," and that also led to 19 many anti-machine gun laws. For example, an article dated 12 14. In response to the wider availability of firearms like 13 the Tommy gun and the BAR, between 1925 and 1934, at least 32 14 states enacted anti-machine gun laws; eight of these laws were 15 passed in 1927 alone (see Exhibits B and D). These state (and 16 eventual federal) enactments were anticipated, justified, and 17 promoted by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform 18 State Laws, a national organization formed in 1892 to provide 19 "non-partisan, well-conceived and well-drafted legislation that 20 brings clarity and stability to critical areas of state statutory 21 law."¹⁹ (Today, the organization is known as the Uniform Law 22 Commission.) In 1923, the Commission organized a special 23 committee to draft a "Uniform Act to Regulate the Sale and 24 Possession of Firearms." In 1928, it issued a model law calling 25 for the prohibition of the possession of "any firearm which

3 "guns of the pistol type." In 1932, it issued a model act 4 "intended not only to curb the use of the machine gun, but to 5 make it unwise for any civilian to possess one of the 6 objectionable type." The Commission explained that, between 1923 7 and 1930, "the infant industry of racketeering grew to monstrous 8 size, and with it the automatic pistol replaced the revolver, to 9 be in turn displaced by a partly concealable type of machine gun-10 the Thompson .45 inch caliber submachine gun becoming most 11 popular. . . ."²¹

12 15. Congress enacted a machine gun ban for the District of 13 Columbia in 1932 which included as a machine gun "any firearm 14 which shoots automatically or semiautomatically more than twelve 15 shots without reloading."²² The National Rifle Association 16 endorsed DC's ban, stating "it is our desire [that] this 17 legislation be enacted for the District of Columbia, in which 18 case it can then be used as a guide throughout the states of the 19 Union."²³ In his testimony before Congress in 1934 on the bill

6 16. In 1934, Congress enacted the National Firearms Act, 7 which imposed a series of strict (and effective²⁵) requirements on 8 the civilian acquisition and general circulation of fully 9 automatic weapons, like the Tommy gun. The National Firearms Act 10 imposed a tax on the manufacture, sale, and transfer of listed 11 weapons, including machine guns, sawed-off shotguns and rifles, 12 silencers, and "any other weapons" with certain firing 13 capabilities. Such weapons had to be registered with the 14 Treasury Department, and the owners fingerprinted and subject to 15 a background check, with the payment of a $200 tax.²⁶ The early 16 models of the Tommy gun could fire "an astounding 1,500 rounds 17 per minute. A Tommy gun could go through a 100-round drum 18 magazine in four seconds. Later versions fired 600 to 700 rounds 19 per minute."²⁷

²⁷ Moss, "From Gangland to the Battlefield."

1 17. In his opening statement to the Ways and Means 2 Committee of the U.S. House of Representatives, Attorney General 3 Homer Cummings made clear that the bill under consideration was 4 designed to fight the epidemic of gun crime where criminals could 5 evade capture by crossing state lines:

6 The development of late years of the predatory criminal 7 who passes rapidly from State to State, has created a 8 situation which is giving concern to all who are 9 interested in law and order. . . . there are more people 10 in the underworld today armed with deadly weapons, in 11 fact, twice as many, as there are in the Army and the 12 Navy of the United States combined. . . . In other words, 13 roughly speaking, there are at least 500,000 of these 14 people who are warring against society and who are 15 carrying about with them or have available at hand, 16 weapons of the most deadly character.²⁸

17 As one member of the committee observed, "The question in my mind 18 and I think in the majority of the committee is what we can do to 19 aid in suppressing violations by such men as [John] Dillinger and 20 others."²⁹

21 18. To address the problem, the original version of the 22 bill proposed regulating both semi-automatic and fully automatic 23 firearms, as it defined restricted machine guns this way: "The 24 term 'machine gun' means any weapon designed to shoot 25 automatically or semiautomatically 12 or more shots without 26 reloading."³⁰ The final version of the bill limited restrictions 27 to fully automatic firearms. Contemporary assault weapons that 29 version of the bill that appears on page 1 of the Hearings had ²⁹ "Hearings Before the Committee on Ways and Means," 42.

1 fire semi-automatically, like AR-platform rifles, are excluded
2 from the National Firearms Act.

3 19. In addition to the National Firearms Act's restrictions 4 on fully automatic weapons, during this same time period, at 5 least seven states plus the District of Columbia, and as many as 6 eleven states, enacted laws restricting semi-automatic weapons 7 (see Exhibit B).³¹ The reason for restricting semi-automatic 8 firearms is not hard to discern. With the exception of the 9 District of Columbia's restrictions on semi-automatic weapons, 10 these restrictions all appeared in the same statutes as those 11 restricting fully automatic weapons, which utilize the same 12 fundamental firearms technology: an action that automatically 13 loads a new round into the chamber after each shot is fired, 14 potentially with the use of detachable ammunition magazines or 15 similar feeding devices, and is capable of firing numerous rounds 16 without reloading.³²

17 20. As the prior discussion reveals, the regulation of 18 automatic and semi-automatic weapons in the 1920s and 1930s was 19 closely tied to the enhanced firing capacity of these weapons and 20 the attractiveness (and use) of these weapons by criminals at 21 that time. By that time, gun technology was now available that 23 ³¹ See also Robert J. Spitzer, "Gun Law History in the United 24 States and Second Amendment Rights," Law and Contemporary 25 Problems 80 (2017): 68-71. The language of the restrictions in 26 Illinois, Maine, and South Carolina was ambiguous regarding 27 whether they applied to semi-automatic weapons.

28 ³² Spitzer, The Gun Dilemma, 32-33. In 1913, Florida enacted this measure: "It shall, at any time, be unlawful to hunt game in Marion County with guns—known as Automatic guns." While an automatic weapon fires a continuous stream of bullets when the trigger is depressed, a semi-automatic weapon fires a single shot with each pull of the trigger.

1 made it possible for ammunition to be reliably fired in rapid 2 succession and guns to be reloaded through interchangeable 3 ammunition magazines or similar devices. Again, the lesson is 4 the same: once these technologies began to spread in civil 5 society, regulatory efforts proliferated.

6 B. State Regulation of Ammunition Feeding Devices

7 21. Restrictions on fully automatic and semi-automatic 8 firearms were closely tied to restrictions on ammunition 9 magazines or their equivalent, as both automatic and semi-10 automatic weapons are predicated on some kind of mechanical 11 loading function or device that automatically feeds new rounds 12 into the firing chamber after the previous round is fired. As is 13 the case with contemporary state limitations on ammunition 14 magazine capacity, state laws enacted early in the twentieth 15 century imposed restrictions based on the number of rounds that 16 could be fired without reloading, ranging from more than one 17 (Massachusetts and Minnesota) up to a high of eighteen (Ohio).

18 22. Magazine capacity/firing limits were imposed in three 19 categories of state laws (see Table 1 below): ten states plus the 20 District of Columbia regulating semi-automatic and fully 21 automatic weapons (California, District of Columbia, 22 Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, New Jersey, North Carolina, 23 Ohio, Rhode Island, South Dakota, and Virginia³³); eleven states

23. A 1927 California law, for example, prohibited the possession of any "machine gun," where that term was defined to include:

all firearms known as machine rifles, machine guns or submachine guns capable of discharging automatically and continuously loaded ammunition of any caliber in which the ammunition is fed to such gun from or by means of restrictions after 1934. See Duke Law Center for Firearms Law, "Repository of Historical Gun Laws," <https://law.duke.edu/gunlaws/>.

1 clips, disks, drums, belts or other separable mechanical 2 device.³⁷

3 24. The other three states in this category (Hawaii, 4 Missouri, Washington³⁸) utilized this same description. In all,
5 at least twenty-three states enacted twenty-six gun restrictions 6 based on the regulation of ammunition magazines or similar 7 feeding devices, and/or round capacity (see Table 1). The 8 original version of the legislation that became the National 9 Firearms Act of 1934, as noted earlier, included this definition 10 of machine gun that encompassed both semi-automatic and fully 11 automatic firearms: "The term 'machine gun' means any weapon 12 designed to shoot automatically or semiautomatically 12 or more 13 shots without reloading."³⁹ (This text was derived from the law 14 enacted by Congress for the District of Columbia in 1932, which 15 also stipulated a 12 round limit, as noted previously.⁴⁰ The 16 final version of the 1934 bill was limited to fully automatic 17 firearms only and did not include any limitation by number of 18 rounds fired.) Regulations concerning removable magazines and 19 magazine capacity were thus common as early as the 1920s—the 20 period of time when these weapons and devices began to make their 21 way into civilian life and also contributed to violence and 22 criminality, as illustrated by the Tommy gun narrative and other 23 weapons discussed here—as these regulations were adopted by

3 25. Finally, the Memorandum of Points and Authorities in 4 Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Summary Judgment in this case 5 says, erroneously, that only "six states enacted restrictions 6 involving ammunition capacity" in the 1920s and early 1930s and 7 that "California was the only state to limit magazine capacity to 8 10 rounds."⁴² As the foregoing analysis here shows, both of these 9 statements are false. As Table 1 shows, a total of at least 23
10 states enacted 26 laws restricting ammunition magazines; 15 11 states enacted ammunition feeding limits of ten rounds or fewer.
12 Another 6 states restricted any weapon that could receive 13 removable ammunition feeding devices.

14 C. Lessons from the Regulation of Automatic and Semi- 15 Automatic Firearms and Ammunition Feeding Devices
16 in the Early Twentieth Century

17 26. The lesson from this sequence of events early in the 18 twentieth century demonstrates that changes in gun policy 19 followed a series of steps that respond to developments in 20 firearms technologies and their use in crime, each dependent on 21 the previous step. First, a new gun or gun technology is 22 invented. Second, it may then be patented, though the patenting 23 of a design or idea by no means assures that it will proceed

1 beyond this point. Third, it may then be developed with a focus 2 on military applications and supplying military needs, not 3 directly for civilian acquisition or use. Fourth, some military-4 designed weapons may then spread to, or be adapted to, civilian 5 markets and use. Finally, if such weapons then circulate 6 sufficiently in society to pose a safety, violence, or 7 criminological problem or threat, calls for government regulation 8 or restriction then may lead to gun policy/law changes. New gun 9 laws are not enacted when firearm technologies are invented or 10 conceived. They are enacted when those technologies circulate 11 sufficiently in society to spill over into criminal or other 12 harmful use, presenting public safety concerns that governments 13 attempt to address through their police and policy-making powers.

14 27. This lesson is significant because some argue that the 15 absence of government gun regulations in history—at the time of 16 the invention of various weapons or weapons developments—means 17 that regulations now are unjustifiable, or have no historical 18 basis. For example, David Kopel argues that “[m]agazines of more 19 than ten rounds are older than the United States.”⁴³ Drawing on 20 examples like a firearm “created around 1580” capable of firing 21 sixteen “‘superposed’ loads” (with each round stacked on top of 22 the other); the Puckle gun said to fire eleven shots and patented 23 in 1718; the Girandoni air rifle, invented in the late 1700s; and 24 the Pepperbox pistol of the early 1800s,⁴⁴ Kopel suggests that 25 “magazines of more than ten rounds are older than the Second

1 Amendment."⁴⁵ Therefore, by Kopel's reckoning, since these 2 weapons existed early in (or even before) the country's 3 existence, and were not specifically regulated, ipso facto, 4 today's governments are unable to regulate assault weapons, like 5 AR-platform rifles, or magazines exceeding certain capacities
6 (typically, a ten-round limit).⁴⁶ More to the point, Kopel's 7 claim that ammunition magazines holding "more than ten rounds"
8 were "very commonly possessed in the United States since 1862"
9 and were "owned by many millions of law-abiding Americans" dating 10 back to the "mid-nineteenth century"⁴⁷ is simply false, as this 11 Declaration demonstrates.

12 28. Kopel's arguments, along with similar arguments made in 13 the Memorandum of Points and Authorities in Support of 14 Plaintiffs' Motion for Summary Judgment in this case,⁴⁸ fail for 15 two sets of reasons. First, as explained in the following 16 section, this sort of narrative misrepresents the availability 17 and capabilities of these early weapons. As all of these examples 18 show, these experimental weapons were just that—experimental. And 19 almost without exception, these experimental weapons (though 20 important for later inventors) were failures, in that they failed 21 to develop and produce reliable multi-shot weapons. Second,

22 ⁴⁵ Ibid., 849.

23 ⁴⁶ Ibid., 871-72 ("a court which today ruled that [10-round] 24 magazines are 'dangerous and unusual' would seem to have some 26 half of being 'in common use' and 'typically possessed by law-27 abiding citizens for lawful purposes,' became 'dangerous and 28 unusual' in the twenty-first century.").

26 ⁴⁷ Ibid., 871. Kopel insists "that [10-round] magazines" have 27 been "'in common use' and 'typically possessed by law-abiding 28 citizens for lawful purposes'" for "a century and a half" (871-72). This claim is both false and unverified by his article.

⁴⁸ MPA, 15-20.

1 these accounts fail to understand the relationship between 2 firearms' technological development, their spread into civil 3 society, and government gun policy. As one gun history expert 4 noted, "the guns of 1830 were essentially what they had been in 5 1430: single metal tubes or barrels stuffed with combustible 6 powder and projectiles" where "after every shot, the shooter had 7 to carry out a minimum of three steps: pour powder into the 8 barrel; add a projectile. . .; then ignite the gunpowder and send 9 the projectile on its way."⁴⁹ The firearms and firearm feeding 10 devices regulated in the early twentieth century represented a 11 dramatically different type of firearm, capable of reliable, 12 rapid fire utilizing interchangeable ammunition feeding devices.

13 D. The History of Pre-Twentieth Century Firearms
14 Technologies

15 29. As researchers and experts of gun history have noted, 16 experimental multi-shot guns existed in the eighteenth century 17 (with multi-shot experimental designs dating back as much as two 18 centuries earlier). Kopel's example of a firearm from the late 19 1500s that could fire up to sixteen rounds is drawn from a book 20 titled, Firearms Curiosa. But this book's very title indicates 21 why this narrative is irrelevant to the modern gun debate. The 22 definition of "curiosa" is something that is rare or unusual. As 23 the book's author, Lewis Winant says, his book is about "oddity 24 guns" and "peculiar guns."⁵⁰ That is, they were anything but 25 common, ordinary, or found in general circulation. Winant's

⁵⁰ Lewis Winant, Firearms Curiosa (New York: Bonanza Books, 1955), 8, 9.

1 description of the sixteen shot gun from the 1500s is that "the 2 first pull of the trigger" fires "nine Roman candle charges, a 3 second pull will release the wheel on the rear lock and set off 4 six more such charges, and finally a third pull will fire the one 5 remaining shot."⁵¹ A "Roman candle charge" was defined by Winant 6 as one where "the operator had no control of the interval between 7 shots; he could not stop the firing once he had started it."⁵² In 8 other words, this firing process was more like lighting the fuse 9 of a string of firecrackers, where their ignition occurs in a 10 manner that cannot be controlled by the operator once the initial 11 charge is ignited.

12 30. Roman candle firing was one type of "superposed" or 13 "superimposed" firing. The other type was controlled, where the 14 gun "was charged with one load on top of another, but the 15 operator had control of the interval between shots. It might 16 have one movable lock or several fixed locks. Each shot would be 17 fired by trigger pull, presumably when the operator felt he had 18 the proper aim."⁵³ Winant concludes: "Of all the ideas for 19 producing multishot firearms the scheme of superimposing loads in 20 one barrel is probably the oldest, the most discredited, the most 21 frequently recurring, and also the most readily accepted as 22 new."⁵⁴

23 31. An early multi-shot gun, the "Puckle Gun," patented in 24 1718 in London by James Puckle, could fire nine rounds per minute 25 (hardly comparable to the firing capabilities of semi- and fully 1 automatic weapons of the early twentieth century or modern era).

2 The patent drawing of this weapon shows it sitting on a tripod on 3 the ground.⁵⁵ It was not a held-held weapon. In the patent,
4 Puckle described it as "a portable Gun or Machine (by me lately 5 invented) called a DEFENCE."⁵⁶ It was indeed a military weapon, 6 as Winant says: "Of the oddities among military weapons none has 7 received more publicity than the Puckle gun. . . . The Puckle
8 invention was probably the first crank-operated machine gun. It 9 embodied several elements that closely resemble construction 10 features of Gatling, Hotchkiss and other manually-operated 11 machine guns." Winant continued, "It is doubtful that any of the 12 Puckle guns that may have been actually produced ever saw 13 service. A different account of this weapon says: "There is in 14 fact no record of such a gun ever having been built,"⁵⁷ although 15 there are claims to the contrary. A contemporaneous poet, 16 commenting on 'Puckle's Machine Company', wrote 'Fear not, my 17 friends, this terrible machine. They're only wounded who have 18 shares therein.'⁵⁸ This weapon "never advanced beyond the 19 prototype stage."⁵⁹

20 32. In short, it was an experimental weapon designed for 21 military use, and the patent's reference to "DEFENCE" was clearly 22 a reference to military defense, not personal defense. As this 23 account confirms, it was likely never even manufactured beyond

6 Congress in 1777, claiming that he could produce and provide a

9 "created a rifle capable of firing 'Sixteen Balls loaded at one 10 time.'"⁶⁰ After showing preliminary interest and subsequent 11 deliberation, Congress "dismissed Belton's petition altogether"⁶¹ 12 even though Belton offered to provide a demonstration of his 13 invention. The problems with Belton's scheme were evident. It 14 relied on "superposed loads" as a firing method, a "discredited" 15 and dead-end technology (see discussion above). Despite Belton's 16 offer to demonstrate the gun, not only are there "no known 17 surviving examples of Belton's gun," but "the only evidence" of 18 the gun's existence is "the correspondence between Belton and 19 Congress."⁶² The Memorandum claims that Belton actually 20 demonstrated the rifle to at least three officials, including 21 General Horatio Gates, Major General Benedict Arnold, and

1 scientist David Rittenhouse,⁶³ which is almost certainly 2 incorrect. What is true is that these individuals, and some 3 others, signed a letter submitted by Belton to Congress "claiming 4 that his invention would be of 'great Service, in the Defense of 5 lives, Redoubts, Ships &c, & even in the Field.'"⁶⁴ None of this 6 supports the Memorandum's baseless claim that "the exchange 7 proves that the Founders embraced repeaters."⁶⁵ It did no such 8 thing.

9 34. In all, this anecdote provides no evidence that 10 Belton's experimentation bore any relationship to actual firearms 11 in circulation in the U.S.—since Belton's weapon was never proven 12 feasible, much less reproduced, much less distributed—during this 13 time. The same is true of other weapons cited in the Memorandum.
14 The Kalthoff, the Lorenzoni, the Cookson, and the other 15 experimental weapons cited in the Memorandum all share these same 16 traits.⁶⁶ The fact that they existed in the world as experimental 17 prototypes means only that. As Harold L. Peterson observed, gun 18 technologies including multiple barrels, revolving cylinders, 19 ammunition magazines, and superposed loads were long the focus of 20 experimentation. But "[r]efinement and perfection [of these 21 technologies] took centuries."⁶⁷

1 "superposed" shots before reloading.⁶⁸ Yet according to 2 Flayderman's Guide to Antique American Firearms, its production 3 quantity was so small as to be "unknown" and therefore is 4 "extremely rare," unsurprising since it utilized fatally 5 defective "superposed" firing (discussed earlier) relying on 6 twelve individual touchholes.⁶⁹ Similar problems plagued or 7 doomed multi-shot flintlock pistols of the early nineteenth 8 century. According to Carl P. Russell: "Flintlock revolving 9 pistols had been given trials and some practical use very early 10 in the nineteenth century, but the loose priming powder in the 11 pan of each cylinder constituted a hazard that was never 12 eliminated."⁷⁰ Peterson concurs. "As long as the powder and ball 13 had to be loaded separately there was no hope for a simple and 14 safe magazine repeater."⁷¹

15 36. Another example often cited is the Girandoni (or 16 Girardoni) air rifle, a military weapon developed for crack shots 17 in the Austrian army that was capable of firing up to 20 rounds.
18 One of these guns somehow made its way to America and was taken 19 along on the Lewis and Clark expedition of 1804-1806.⁷² But these 20 guns were a rarity, as they were extremely expensive, fragile,

1 and complex, and few were made—no more than about 1,500 found in 2 Europe.⁷³ In fact, the rifles never caught on as they proved to 3 be impractical on the battlefield, and even more so for civilian 4 use. To wit: “Leather gaskets needed to be constantly maintained 5 and swelled with water to sustain pressure. Once empty the 6 reservoirs required a significant effort and 1500 strokes to 7 restore full power. A supply wagon was subsequently outfitted 8 with a mounted pump to readily supply soldiers but this negated 9 one of the key features—mobility. The rudimentary fabrication 10 methods of the day engineered weak threading on the reservoir 11 neck and this was the ultimate downfall of the weapon. The 12 reservoirs were delicate in the field and if the riveted brazed 13 welds parted the weapon was rendered into an awkward club as a 14 last resort.”⁷⁴ It was pulled from military service by 1815.⁷⁵ 15 The Memorandum implies that these weapons were prolific. They 16 were not. One manufacturer, Isaiah Lukens of Pennsylvania, 17 apparently produced perhaps four such weapons.⁷⁶ The rest were 18 made and used in Europe. And while Lewis and Clark did bring a 19 Girandoni with them, they never intended to use it in combat or 20 battle, but to impress and deter the Native Americans they

1 encountered (which it did). Whenever they planned to fire the 2 gun, they were careful to prepare it before encountering Native
3 Americans so that the Indians were not aware of the extensive 4 pre-fire preparations needed.⁷⁷

5 37. Drawing on the examples of these early weapons, the 6 Memorandum concludes that "the Founders and Framers were well 7 aware of the advent, existence, and popularity of magazines 8 capable of holding more than ten rounds of ammunition, as well as 9 repeating arms that were capable of firing more than ten rounds 10 without reloading."⁷⁸ The Memorandum further refers erroneously 11 to "the prevalence of repeaters and magazines that allowed 12 operators to fire more than ten rounds without reloading and to 13 quickly reload their arms" concluding that "there are no Founding 14 Era prohibitions on magazine capacity."⁷⁹ But none of these 15 weapons was "popular" or "prevalent," and no evidence is offered 16 in the Memorandum to suggest otherwise; none of the weapons was 17 technologically or commercially feasible; none was replicated in 18 meaningful numbers (arguably except for the 1500 European 19 Girandonis, a military weapon); and none circulated in society.
20 Therefore, there was no reason whatsoever for government leaders 21 to pay them the slightest attention when it came to making the 22 laws of the land.

23 38. To take another example, the Volcanic repeating pistol, 24 patented in 1854, was said to have the ability to fire up to "ten

1 or greater rounds.”⁸⁰ The Volcanic Repeating Arms Company was 2 founded in 1855, and it experimented with a number of design
3 innovations. But the company was “short-lived” and went 4 “defunct” in 1866, even though its partners included Horace 5 Smith, Daniel B. Wesson, and Courtlandt Palmer.⁸¹ Its patent and 6 technological work were important for subsequent developments, 7 especially for Smith and Wesson’s later work, but the actual 8 weapons produced by Volcanic were few, flawed, and experimental,⁸² 9 dubbed “radical defects” by Winchester himself.⁸³ In 1857 and 10 1858, Volcanic produced 3,200 “flawed” repeaters, most of which 11 “collected dust for many decades” until the company finally sold 12 them for fifty cents each to employees.⁸⁴

13 39. Another account laboring to establish early gun firing 14 provenance asserts that “[s]emi-automatic technology was 15 developed in the 1880s” with the “Mannlicher rifle. . . generally 16 attributed to be the first semi-automatic rifle.”⁸⁵ Yet this 17 “development” was initially a failure: “Ferdinand von 18 Mannlicher’s Model 1885 self-loading rifle design” was “a 19 failure, never seeing anything even resembling mass production.”⁸⁶

1 The true semi-automatic weapon did not become feasible and 2 available until the beginning of the twentieth century, and the 3 primary market was the military.⁸⁷

4 40. The more well-known "pepperbox," a multi-shot firearm
5 where the number of shots capable of being fired repeatedly 6 coincided with the number of barrels bundled together, found some 7 civilian market popularity in the early 1800s, but it was rapidly
8 eclipsed by the superior Colt revolver. The reason: pepperboxes 9 were "heavy, lumpy, and impractical."⁸⁸ These problems were only 10 exacerbated when additional barrels were added. That is why 11 "[m]ost multibarreled firearms" were "[t]wo- and three-barrel 12 combinations . . . with four-barreled specimens slightly less 13 popular."⁸⁹ By another account, "because of its small bore, short 14 range, and lack of accuracy, the pepperbox was by no means as 15 satisfactory as a revolver for military use."⁹⁰ Further, "[t]hey 16 also had a nasty habit of discharging all their barrels at once.

18 innocent bystanders, as well as his intended victim."⁹¹ Indeed, 19 the Colt revolver was "the first widely used multishot weapon,"⁹²

1 41. Colt's technological developments notwithstanding, 2 single shot guns were the ubiquitous firearm until after the 3 Civil War, although some long gun repeaters appeared late in the 4 Civil War.⁹³ Even so, the "standard infantry weapon [in the Civil 5 War] remained the single-shot, muzzle-loaded weapon."⁹⁴ Historian 6 James M. McPherson concurred that, even though some repeating 7 rifles appeared in the Civil War as early as 1863, single-shot 8 muzzle-loaders "remained the principal infantry weapons 9 throughout the war."⁹⁵

10 42. As noted, the idea of an available, affordable, 11 reliable multi-shot firearm did not arise until the development 12 of Colt's multi-shot revolver in the 1830s. Indeed, Colt 13 biographer Jim Rasenberger says that Colt's pistol was the first 14 practical firearm that could shoot more than one bullet without 15 reloading.⁹⁶ Even then, Colt could not readily manufacture multi-16 shot weapons for many years because he could find no market for 17 them, either from the government or the public. The government, 18 in fact, dismissed such firearms as mere "novelties."⁹⁷ After an 19 1837 test of Colt's gun and others the government concluded that 20 it was "entirely unsuited to the general purposes of the 1 service."⁹⁸ The government also rejected the weapon after tests

2 in 1836, 1840, and 1850. Colt's early failure to cultivate 3 either a military or a civilian market in the U.S. drove him to 4 bankruptcy and then to market his guns to European governments in 5 the 1840s. The gun made appearances in the pre-Civil War West, 6 yet even during the Civil War, "Colt's revolver was a sideshow 7 through most of the war. . . ."⁹⁹ And though the Colt-type 8 revolver "had proved itself, the official sidearm of the United 9 States Army [in the Civil War] remained a single shot pistol."¹⁰⁰ 10 It took the Colt's use during the Civil War to finally spur the 11 post-Civil War proliferation of the Colt-type revolver and 12 similar firearms into society.¹⁰¹

13 43. While inventor Benjamin Henry claims credit for 14 developing the first practical, lever action repeating rifle 15 (patented in 1860), his competitor Winchester "deftly gutted" the 16 Henry Arms Company, coopting it to form the Winchester Arms
17 Company in 1866, paving the way for Winchester's dominance.¹⁰²
18 The Winchester rifle could fire up to fifteen rounds without 19 reloading. Yet the widely known Winchester 1873, "was designed 20 for sale to the Government as a military arm."¹⁰³ A gun whose 21 legendary status wildly outdistanced its actual production and

 2 celebrity biography backdated its diffusion and even its 3 popularity."¹⁰⁴ In fact, the slogan stating that the Winchester
 4 "won the West" was invented by a Winchester executive as a 5 marketing ploy in 1919.¹⁰⁵ As historian Michael Vorenberg 6 concluded: "Rifles holding more than 10 rounds made up a tiny 7 fraction of all firearms in the United States during 8 Reconstruction."¹⁰⁶ An analysis of production runs of Henrys and 9 Winchesters from 1861-1871 concluded that they produced a total 10 of 74,000 guns. Most of them—about 64,000—were sold to foreign 11 militaries, leaving about 9,200 for domestic American sales. Of 12 those, 8,500 were acquired by Union soldiers, leaving a very 13 small supply of guns for domestic civilian acquisition.¹⁰⁷ By 14 comparison, 845,713 Springfield "trap-door" single shot rifles
 15 were manufactured during this same time period.¹⁰⁸

16 44. Additionally, the Winchester was not a semi-automatic 17 firearm; it was a lever-action rifle that required the shooter to 18 manipulate a lever in a forward-and-back motion before each shot.

1 And when the gun was emptied, it had to be manually reloaded, one 2 round at a time.¹⁰⁹ The Winchester Model 1905, then called a 3 "self-loading" rifle, was a true semi-automatic firearm. It 4 could receive a five or ten round box magazine, although from 5 1905 to 1920 only about 30,000 of the guns were made. Even in 6 World War I, soldiers primarily used bolt-action one shot rifles
7 that could fire about twelve rounds per minute.¹¹⁰

8 45. With all this, the Winchester was by no means 9 universally embraced by long gun users. Indeed, "a good many 10 westerners would have nothing to do with the early Winchesters or 11 other repeaters, for reasons they considered very sound, and not 12 until the 1880s did the repeating rifle assert its dominance over 13 the single-shot breechloader."¹¹¹ According to A.C. Gould, 14 writing in 1892, single-shot rifles were "less complicated, and 15 less liable to get out of order; will shoot a greater variety of 16 ammunition; will shoot uncrimped ammunition, patched or unpatched

1 46. Referring to the post-Civil War Reconstruction period, 2 the Memorandum says that: "By the Fourteenth Amendment's 3 ratification in 1868, Americans had seen 24-barreled pistols, 12-4 barreled rifles, 21-shot revolvers, 20-round beltfed chain 5 pistols, 42-shot Ferris Wheel pistols, and rifles capable of 6 firing 60 shots in 60 seconds."¹¹³ All of these listed weapons 7 existed during this time, but none of them found their way into 8 general circulation, and most of these were exotic oddities. To 9 say that these weapons had been "seen" by 1868 is all but 10 meaningless for the purposes of understanding the relationship 11 between the technology of weapons development, the ability to 12 manufacture the given weapon reliably and in large numbers, their 13 subsequent actual circulation in society, and subsequent 14 criminological and public safety problems. When weapons did enter 15 society and pose these problems, the government did indeed enact 16 weapons regulations and restrictions, as described in this 17 document.

18 47. Following the Civil War, revolvers were heavily 19 marketed to the civilian population. For example, when Smith &
20 Wesson's near-monopoly over the manufacture of cartridge 21 revolvers ended with the expiration of its Rollin White patent in 22 1870, "dozens of other [gun] makers"¹¹⁴ entered the market. Soon 23 these other manufacturers were producing abundant cheap revolvers 24 at low cost to the consumer. As Kennett and Anderson noted, 25 Colt's initial revolvers sold for $35, but by 1900 the "'two 26 dollar pistol' was a fixture in American life."¹¹⁵ Further, as the

1 mail order business boomed from the 1870s on, companies like 2 Montgomery Ward and Sears began selling revolvers through their 3 catalogs—especially small, cheaper, lighter-weight models that 4 cost less to mail. Cheap handguns were advertised not only 5 through catalogs, but also through newspaper and magazine
6 advertisements.¹¹⁶

7 48. The rise in the circulation of multi-shot handguns in 8 society was accompanied by the rapid spread of concealed carry 9 restrictions (see Exhibits B-E), especially in the post-Civil War 10 period, precisely because of their contribution to escalating 11 interpersonal violence.¹¹⁷ By the end of the nineteenth century, 12 virtually every state in the country prohibited or severely

1 multi-shot semi-automatic and fully automatic long guns began to 2 circulate appreciably in society and came to be associated with 3 criminal use that they became a regulatory and public policy 4 concern.

5 49. As noted earlier, the problems with arguments claiming 6 that historical multi-shot weapons were both viable and commonly 7 possessed before the late nineteenth century are two-fold: they 8 misrepresent the actual past of the (usually experimental and 9 technologically infeasible) weapons cited, and even more 10 importantly fail to understand the connection between gun 11 technology developments and the steps leading up to changes in 12 gun-related public policy to regulate threats posed by those 13 developments. As discussed previously, that process has 14 occurred, both historically and in the modern era, through a 15 series of sequential steps.

16 50. First, a new gun or gun technology must be invented.
17 Second, it is then often patented, noting that there are many 18 steps between a patent, actual gun production, distribution and 19 dissemination. As Lewis Winant sardonically observed, "Many 20 patents are granted for arms that die a-borning."¹²⁰ And as gun 21 expert Jack O'Connor wrote, "many types of guns were invented, 22 produced and discarded through the early years of the development 23 of the United States."¹²¹ Third, weapons development is

1 historically tied to military need and military acquisition, not 2 directly for civilian use or self-defense applications. Military 3 weaponry is developed without consideration of potential civilian 4 use and the consequences of dissemination in the civilian 5 market.¹²² Fourth, some military-designed weapons may then spill 6 over into, or be adapted to, civilian markets and use. Fifth, if 7 such weapons then circulate sufficiently to pose a public safety 8 or criminological problem or threat, calls for government 9 regulation or restriction then may lead to gun policy/law 10 changes. This general sequence is echoed in works like the 11 Buyer's Guide to Assault Weapons.¹²³

12 51. Again, to simply assert or assume that past firearms 13 design/development, invention, or patenting equals commonality, 14 viability, popularity, or a measurable presence or impact on 15 society, is a leap in logic without historical foundation. It 16 would be as logical to reject modern governmental regulation of 17 electric power through such government agencies as state power 18 commissions and the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission because 19 no such regulation was enacted around the time of Benjamin 20 Franklin's experiments with electricity in the mid-eighteenth 21 century. The fact that inventors worked on new firearm designs
22

23 ¹²² Note that the third step, and perhaps the second, do not 24 apply to non-firearms weapons discussed here—in particular the 25 Bowie knife and various clubs. These weapons were mostly not 26 developed for military use, though Bowie knives, for example, 27 were carried by some soldiers during the Civil War. Knives and 28 clubs are far simpler technologically compared to firearms (and of course do not rely on ammunition) and thus were much more easily made, reproduced, and circulated.

IA: Gun Digest Books, 2008), 4-7.

1 and modifications tells us nothing about the consequences of such 2 designs for society and public policy. And the existence of such 3 designs does not equal general availability, much less societal 4 circulation and use of these weapons. Other weapons subject to 5 government restriction in our history further illustrate these 6 principles.

9 52. Similar to government regulation of certain types of 10 firearms and ammunition feeding devices in the early twentieth 11 century, which occurred only after the weapons technologies 12 matured, entered the civilian market, and threatened the public 13 through criminal use, government regulation of other weapons 14 typically followed a version of this trajectory around the time 15 of the ratification of the Fourteenth Amendment in the 1860s and 16 even earlier.

17 A. Historical Restrictions on the Bowie Knife and 18 Similar Long-Bladed Knives

19 53. The Bowie knife is generally credited with having been 20 invented by the brother of adventurer Jim Bowie, Rezin Bowie.
21 The knife was named after Jim Bowie, who reputedly killed one man 22 and wounded another using a "big knife" given to him by his 23 brother in the alternately notorious or celebrated "Sandbar Duel" 24 in 1827.¹²⁴ Bowie died at the Alamo in 1836.

1998), 207-8. Davis persuasively dismisses the claim of a blacksmith, James Black, that he invented or styled the distinctive knife for Rezin Bowie (676-77).

1 54. The "Bowie knife" rapidly became known in the 1830s for 2 the distinctive type of long-bladed single-edged knife with a 3 hand guard identified with Bowie, the man after whom the knife 4 was named. The Bowie legend, the explosive growth and spread of 5 Bowie-related mythology (only magnified by his death at the 6 Alamo), and the knife's distinctive features, encouraged its 7 proliferation,¹²⁵ referred to by one historian as "the craze for 8 the knives."¹²⁶ As was true of other knives with long, thin 9 blades,¹²⁷ they were widely used in fights and duels, especially 10 at a time when single-shot pistols were often unreliable and 11 inaccurate.¹²⁸ Indeed, such knives were known as "fighting 12 knives"¹²⁹ that were "intended for combat."¹³⁰ In the early 13 nineteenth century "guns and knives accounted for a growing share 14 of the known weapons that whites used to kill whites."¹³¹ In 15 1834, for example, a grand jury in Jasper County, Georgia

2 impunity, or if resistance is made the pistol dirk or 3 club is immediately resorted to, hence we so often hear of the stabbing shooting & murdering so many of our citizens.¹³²

4 55. Homicide rates increased in the South in the early 5 nineteenth century, as did laws restricting concealed weapons 6 carrying. Dueling also persisted during this time, even as the 7 practice was widely deplored by religious and other groups, in 8 newspapers, by anti-dueling societies and political leaders.¹³³
9 Bowie knife expert Norm Flayderman provides abundant and prolific 10 evidence of the early criminal use of Bowie knives in the 1830s, 11 quoting from dozens of contemporaneous newspaper and other 12 accounts, and providing references to literally hundreds of 13 additional articles and accounts attesting to the widespread use 14 of Bowie knives in fights, duels, brawls and other criminal 15 activities.¹³⁴ Flayderman concludes that, as early as 1836, "most 16 of the American public was well aware of the Bowie knife."¹³⁵ 17 (Very much like contemporary assault weapons,¹³⁶ the Bowie knife's 18 notorious reputation also, if perversely, fanned its sale and 19 acquisition.¹³⁷) All this led to widespread enactment of laws

 2 Congress, where a constitutional amendment in the form of a joint 4 In 1839, Congress passed a measure barring dueling in the 5 District of Columbia.¹³⁹ Both pistols and knives were prominently 6 used in such affairs.¹⁴⁰

7 56. At least three state court cases dealt in some manner 8 with fighting knives like the Bowie knife. In the 1840 case of 9 *Aymette v. State*¹⁴¹ the Supreme Court of Tennessee upheld the 10 conviction of William Aymette for wearing a Bowie knife concealed 11 under his clothes under a state law of 1837–1838, ch. 137, sec.
 12 2, providing “that, if any person shall wear any bowie-knife, or 13 Arkansas toothpick, or other knife or weapon that shall in form, 14 shape, or size resemble a bowie-knife or Arkansas toothpick, 15 under his clothes, or keep the same concealed about his person 16 such person shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon 17 conviction thereof, shall be fined in a sum not less than two 18 hundred dollars, and shall be imprisoned in the county jail not 19 less than three months and not more than six months.”¹⁴² In its 20 decision, the court concluded that the prohibition against 21 wearing the named weapons was well justified in that they “are

1 in the hands of the robber and the assassin."¹⁴³ The court 2 continued, "The Legislature, therefore, have a right to prohibit 3 the wearing or keeping weapons dangerous to the peace and safety 4 of the citizens. . . ."¹⁴⁴ Further, the court added that the 5 state law existed "to preserve the public peace, and protect our 6 citizens from the terror which a wanton and unusual exhibition of 7 arms might produce, or their lives from being endangered by 8 desperadoes with concealed arms. . . ."¹⁴⁵

9 57. Four years later, the Tennessee Supreme Court again 10 dealt with a Bowie knife law violation and challenge. In the 11 case of Haynes v. Tennessee (1844),¹⁴⁶ Stephen Haynes was indicted 12 for carrying a concealed Bowie knife. He was convicted of 13 wearing a knife that resembled a Bowie knife but appealed his 14 conviction on the grounds that he was actually carrying a 15 "Mexican pirate knife," which reputedly had a shorter, narrower 16 blade. (At the trial, witnesses disagreed as to the proper name 17 for the knife in question.) He also argued that the state law, 18 in listing various types of knives including those "similar" to 19 Bowie knives, was "too indefinite" and could therefore lead to 20 "absurd consequences" that "must follow its enforcement. . . ."¹⁴⁷ 21 On appeal, the court upheld his conviction and commended the 22 Tennessee state legislature's enactment: "The design of the 23 statute was to prohibit the wearing of bowie knives and others of 24 a similar description, which the experience of the country had 25 proven to be extremely dangerous and destructive to human life;

1 the carrying of which by truculent and evil disposed persons but 2 too often ended in assassination."¹⁴⁸ The court continued: "The 3 design, meaning, and intent was to guard against the destruction 4 of human life, by prohibiting the wearing [of] heavy, dangerous, 5 destructive knives, the only use of which is to kill. . . ."¹⁴⁹ 6 The court noted that the state law "wisely provides against bowie 7 knives, Arkansas tooth picks, or any other weapon in form, shape 8 or size, resembling them."¹⁵⁰ Noting the similarity among knives 9 and the possibility of an unjust outcome where, say, a person 10 might be convicted of carrying a mere pocket knife, the court 11 posed this question: "what is to protect against conviction, when 12 the words of the statute cover the charge, and its true spirit 13 and meaning does not?" Their answer: "the judge and jury who try 14 the case."¹⁵¹ As the author of a book on Bowie knives noted, "the 15 fact that the term 'bowie knife' had never been precisely defined 16 did not help his [Haynes's] case."¹⁵²

17 58. Cockrum v. State (1859) involved John Cockrum, who was 18 charged with the murder of his brother-in-law, William Self, with 19 a Bowie knife.¹⁵³ Under Texas law, "a homicide, which would 20 otherwise be a case of manslaughter, if committed with a bowie-21 knife or dagger, shall be deemed murder and punished as such. . .

1 ."¹⁵⁴ The court upheld the added penalty provision of the law 2 relating to use of a Bowie knife, despite the court's very 3 expansive interpretation of the right to bear arms, but reversed 4 and remanded the man's conviction because of an error related to 5 statutory changes and jury instructions. It described Bowie 6 knives as "an exceeding destructive weapon," an "instrument of 7 almost certain death," and "the most deadly of all weapons in 8 common use."¹⁵⁵ Further, the court said: "He who carries such a 9 weapon. . . makes himself more dangerous to the rights of others, 10 considering the frailties of human nature, than if he carried a 11 less dangerous weapon."¹⁵⁶

12 59. These cases underscore the courts' recognition of the 13 dangerous nature and nefarious use of Bowie knives not only by 14 their characterizations of them, but by the fact that they are 15 treated in the same restrictive and prohibitory manner in law as 16 other dangerous, deadly weapons including pistols and various 17 named clubs.¹⁵⁷

18 ¹⁵⁴ Cockrum v. State, 394.

19 ¹⁵⁵ Cockrum v. State, 403–04. Kopel says, incorrectly, that 20 "Bowie knives. . . were regulated the same as a butcher's knife." 21 According to the Duke Center for Firearms Law Repository of 22 Historical Gun Laws (<https://firearmslaw.duke.edu/repository/search-the-repository/>) 23 six states had laws that restricted butcher knives by name, 24 whereas 42 states restricted Bowie knives by name. See Exhibits C
 25 and E. Kopel, "Bowie knife statutes 1837–1899."

26 ¹⁵⁶ Cockrum v. State, 403.

27 ¹⁵⁷ Among the notorious incidents attached to the Bowie knife 28 was its use by two of the conspirators in the Lincoln assassination in 1865. The plan was to assassinate President Lincoln, Vice President Andrew Johnson, and Secretary of State
 William Seward. The man assigned to attack Seward, Lewis Powell, entered the Seward home armed with a pistol and a Bowie knife.
 When one of Seward's sons tried to stop him, Powell tried to shoot him, but his gun misfired, so he used it as a club against the son. When he encountered another son, Powell slashed him with his Bowie knife, the weapon he then used to attack Seward who,

1 60. The ubiquity of the concern about the criminological
2 consequences of carrying Bowie knives and other, similar long-3 bladed knives is seen in the widespread adoption of laws barring 4 or restricting these weapons.¹⁵⁸ In the 1830s, six states 5 enacted laws barring the carrying of Bowie knives by name. From 6 then to the start of the twentieth century, every state plus the 7 District of Columbia (with the sole exception of New Hampshire)
8 restricted Bowie knives: a total of at least 42 states
9 (including the District of Columbia) barred or restricted Bowie 10 knives by name; and another 8 states enacted laws barring the 11 category or type of knife embodied by the Bowie knife but without 12 mentioning them by name (see Exhibits C, E, and H) totaling 49
13 states plus the District of Columbia.¹⁵⁹ Several states banned 14 the possession of Bowie knives outright, and others imposed taxes 15 on the ability for individuals to acquire or possess them (see 16 Exhibit H). The desirability and utility of concealed-carry 17 restrictions were precisely that they pushed dangerous weapons 18 out of public spaces and places, improving public safety through

25 ¹⁵⁸ The near-immediate effort in the states to restrict Bowie 26 knives was noted, for example, in Davis, Three Roads to the 27 Alamo, 582, and in Flayderman, The Bowie Knife, 53-54.

1 the deterrent and punishment effects of such laws, and also 2 discouraging the settlement of private grievances and disputes in 3 public through weapons-fueled violence.

4 61. States relied on a variety of regulatory techniques to 5 suppress Bowie knife carrying: 29 states enacted laws to bar 6 their concealed carry; 15 states barred their carry whether 7 concealed or openly; 7 states enacted enhanced criminal penalties 8 for those who used the knives to commit a crime; 4 states enacted 9 regulatory taxes attached to their commercial sale; 3 states 10 imposed a tax for those who owned the knives; 10 states barred 11 their sale to specified groups of people; and 4 states enacted 12 penalties for brandishing the knives (see Exhibit H).

13 62. The extensive and ubiquitous nature of these Bowie knife 14 prohibitions raises a further question: given the universal 15 agreement that these knives were dangerous, why not simply ban 16 their possession outright? The answer is two-fold. First, 17 America was a developing nation-state in the nineteenth century.
18 The federal and state governments did not yet possess the 19 maturity, powers, tools, or resources to enact, much less 20 implement, any measure as sweeping as a knife ban, especially 21 since knives are technologically very simple to produce. After 22 all, the front-line administrative entity on which we today rely 23 for law enforcement, the police, barely existed (in the way we 24 think of policing today). In the early nineteenth century (up to 25 this time policing fell to a haphazard mix of the watch system, 26 constables, militias, and vigilantes). Modern police forces only 27 came in to being in a handful of large cities before the Civil 28

1 War.¹⁶⁰ Second, the chief remedy enacted by the states to address
2 the problem of knife fighting was far more focused and feasible:
3 to bar the carrying of knives, along with the other two categories 4 of weapons that also threatened public safety, clubs and pistols.
5 The fact that all three types of weapons were consistently treated 6 together is conclusive evidence that all were considered so 7 dangerous and inimical to public safety that they were subject to 8 anti-carry laws and bundled together in legislative enactments.

9 B. Historical Restrictions on Clubs and Other Blunt
10 Weapons

11 63. Among the most widely and ubiquitously regulated harmful 12 implements in U.S. history were various types of clubs and other 13 blunt weapons. (See Exhibits C and E.) Most were anti-carry laws, 14 which also generally encompassed pistols and specific types of 15 knives, although some of the laws extended prohibitions to these 16 weapons' manufacture, possession, sale, or use in crime.¹⁶¹ As the 17 table in Exhibit C shows, at least six distinct types of clubs and 18 blunt objects were regulated in the United States. Notably, every 19 state in the nation had laws restricting one or more types of 20 clubs. According to a detailed reference book on the subject of 21 these blunt instruments by Robert Escobar, they were considered

 7 called vicious, devils and lurking highwaymen."¹⁶⁵ These club-type 8 blunt objects compose a family of objects used for striking 9 others, and while they vary in name and construction, the 10 categories are "somewhat fluid."¹⁶⁶

11 64. Among the six types of clubs regulated in U.S. laws, 15 12 states barred bludgeon carrying. A bludgeon is a short stick 13 with a thickened or weighted end used as a weapon.¹⁶⁷ The

1 nightstick or baton.¹⁷⁰ Escobar cites an early reference to the 2 billy club in an 1854 New Orleans newspaper article in the Daily
 3 True Delta that referred to “police armed with batons,”¹⁷¹ a 4 synonym for a billy club. As this reference suggests, police 5 have long adopted the billy club, or similar striking implements, 6 as part of their on-duty weaponry. At least 16 states had anti-7 billy club laws, totaling 46 laws; the earliest law appears to 8 have been enacted in Kansas in 1862,¹⁷² followed by a New York law
 9 in 1866.¹⁷³ Fourteen states enacted such laws in the 1800s; 11 10 states did so in the early 1900s.

11 66. At least 14 states barred the carrying of “clubs” more 12 generically, without specifying the type. The oldest anti-club 13 law was 1664; 7 states enacted these laws in the 1600s-1700s, 7 14 states in the 1800s, and 2 in the early 1900s.

 17 Escobar discusses a Civil War veteran and later police officer, 18 Edward D. Bean, who experimented with various types of billy 19 clubs to improve their striking power and durability by utilizing 20 leather, often adhered to wood, to reduce the likelihood that the 21 club would break on use. Saps, Blackjacks and Slungshots, 118.
 One of the earliest references to a “billy” was an 1857 newspaper

1 67. Anti-slungshot laws were enacted by 43 states, with 71
 2 laws enacted in the 1800s and 12 in the 1900s. A slungshot (or 3 slung shot), also referred to as "a type of blackjack,"¹⁷⁴ is a 4 hand-held weapon for striking that has a piece of metal or stone 5 at one end attached to a flexible strap or handle that was 6 developed roughly in the 1840s (the first "known use" of 7 slungshot was 1842¹⁷⁵). By one account, "[s]lungshots were 8 widely used by criminals and street gang members in the 19th 9 Century. They had the advantage of being easy to make, silent, 10 and very effective, particularly against an unsuspecting 11 opponent. This gave them a dubious reputation, similar to that 12 carried by switchblade knives in the 1950s, and they were 13 outlawed in many jurisdictions. The use as a criminal weapon 14 continued at least up until the early 1920s."¹⁷⁶ Escobar concurs 15 that slungshots and blackjacks "were a regular part of criminal 16 weaponry. . .and gangsters could be merciless in their use."¹⁷⁷

17 68. In a criminal case considered the most famous of those 18 involving lawyer Abraham Lincoln, the future president defended a 19 man charged with murdering another using a slung shot. In the 20 1858 trial of William "Duff" Armstrong, Lincoln succeeded in 21 winning Armstrong's acquittal.¹⁷⁸

¹⁷⁸ Lincoln was able to discredit the testimony of a witness who claimed to see Armstrong strike the victim with a slung shot at night because of the full moon. Lincoln used as evidence an Almanac to prove that on the night in question, there was no full moon. Judson Hale, "When Lincoln Famously Used the Almanac,"

1 69. These weapons were viewed as especially dangerous or 2 harmful when they emerged in society, given the ubiquity of state 3 laws against carrying them enacted after their invention and 4 their spreading use by criminals and as fighting implements.
5 These devices were invented and appeared in society during an 6 identifiable period of time in the mid-nineteenth century, 7 sparking subsequent wide-ranging prohibitions. The earliest 8 anti-Slungshot law was enacted in 1850; 43 states legislated 9 against them in the 1800s (including the District of Columbia), 10 and 11 states in the early 1900s (note this incorporates multiple 11 laws enacted in more than one century by a few states).

12 70. Sandbags, also known as sand clubs, were also a 13 specific focus in anti-carry laws as well. Consisting of nothing 14 more than sand poured into a bag, sack, sock, or similar tube-15 shaped fabric (although the weight could also be something dense 16 and heavy, like a lock in the end of a sock),¹⁷⁹ their particular 17 appeal was that they could be dispensed with by simply pouring 18 the sand out, leaving nothing more than an empty cloth bag.
19 (Alternately, they could be made heavier by adding water to the 20 sand.) The first anti-sandbag law was 1866, with 10 states 21 enacting such laws—7 in the 1800s and 7 in the early 1900s. Only 22 4 states did not have any prohibitions in any of these six 23 categories, but 3 of those 4 (Montana, Ohio, and Washington 24 State) had blanket legislative provisions against the carrying of 25 any concealed/dangerous/deadly weapons. One state, New

3 C. Historical Restrictions on Pistol Carrying

4 71. Carry restriction laws were widely enacted from the 5 1600s through the start of the twentieth century, spanning over 6 three centuries. As early as 1686, New Jersey enacted a law 7 against wearing weapons because they induced "great fear and 8 quarrels."¹⁸¹ Massachusetts followed in 1750. In the late 1700s, 9 North Carolina and Virginia passed similar laws. In the 1800s, 10 as interpersonal violence and gun carrying spread, 43 states 11 joined the list; 3 more did so in the early 1900s (see Exhibit 12 B). The enactment of laws restricting concealed weapons carrying 13 followed the rise of homicides and interpersonal violence
14 described by historian Randolph Roth who noted that restrictions 15 on firearms from the colonial period to the start of the 16 Revolution were few because homicide rates were low. When 17 homicides did occur, guns were seldom used, in large part because 18 of the time involved loading them, their unreliability, and 19 (especially for pistols) their inaccuracy. After the 20 Revolutionary period, the spread of violence tied to concealable

22 ¹⁸⁰ Up to 2010, New Hampshire had this law on the books:
23 "159:16 Carrying or Selling Weapons. Whoever, except as provided 24 by the laws of this state, sells, has in his possession with 25 intent to sell, or carries on his person any stiletto, switch 26 knife, blackjack, dagger, dirk-knife, slung shot, or metallic 27 knuckles shall be guilty of a misdemeanor; and such weapon or 28 articles so carried by him shall be confiscated to the use of the state." In 2010, the law was amended when it enacted HB 1665 to exclude stilettoes, switch knives, daggers, and dirk-knives.
Compare N.H. Rev. Stat. § 159:16 with 2010 New Hampshire Laws Ch.
67 (H.B. 1665).

Up to 2010, New Hampshire had this law on the books:
"159:16 Carrying or Selling Weapons. Whoe

1 percussion cap pistols and fighting knives led to the enactment
 2 of anti-concealed carry weapons laws.¹⁸² Concealed carry laws
 3 normally targeted pistols as well as the types of fighting knives 4 and various types of clubs discussed here (see Exhibit E for text 5 of such laws). In addition, at least three-fourths of the states 6 enacted laws that penalized public weapons brandishing or 7 display. At least four states did so in the 1600s, two in the 8 1700s, twenty-eight states in the 1800s, and two more in the 9 early 1900s.¹⁸³ As of 1938, "the carrying of concealed pistols is 10 either prohibited absolutely or permitted only with a license in 11 every state but two."¹⁸⁴

12 D. Historical Restrictions on Trap Guns

13 72. Not to be confused with firearms used in trapshooting, 14 trap guns were devices or contraptions rigged in such a way as to 15 fire when the owner need not be present. Typically, trap guns 16 could be set to fire remotely (without the user being present to 17 operate the firearm) by rigging the firearm to be fired with a 18 string or wire when tripped.¹⁸⁵ This early law from New Jersey in 19 1771 both defines and summarizes the problem addressed by this 20 law:

21 _____
 22 ver, except as provided by the laws of this state, sells, 23 has in his possession with intent to sell, or carries on his 24 person any stiletto, switch knife, blackjack, dagger, dirk-knife, 25 slung shot, or metallic knuckles shall be guilty of a 26 misdemeanor; and such weapon or articles so carried by him shall 27 be confiscated to the use of the state." In 2010, the law was 28 amended when it enacted HB 1665 to exclude stilettos, switch knives, daggers, and dirk-knives. Compare

 N.H. Rev. Stat. § 159:16 with 2010 New Hampshire Laws Ch.
 67 (H.B. 1665).

thereof shall be committed to the common Gaol of the 7 73. Also sometimes referred to as "infernal machines,"¹⁸⁷

8 the term trap gun came to encompass other kinds of traps designed 9 to harm or kill those who might encounter them, including for 10 purposes of defending property from intruders. Unlike the other 11 weapons restrictions examined here, opinion was more divided on 12 the relative merits or wisdom of setting such devices, with some 13 arguing that thieves or criminals hurt or killed by the devices 14 had it coming,¹⁸⁸ though the weight of opinion seemed mostly 15 against such devices.¹⁸⁹ Those who set gun traps typically did so 16 to defend their places of business, properties, or possessions.
17 This 1870 newspaper account from an incident in New York City

18 ¹⁸⁶ 1763–1775 N.J. Laws 346, An Act for the Preservation of 19 Deer and Other Game, and to Prevent Trespassing with Guns, ch.
539, § 10.

20 ¹⁸⁷ E.g. 1901 Utah Laws 97–98, An Act Defining an Infernal 21 Machine, and Prescribing Penalties for the Construction or 22 Contrivance of the Same, or Having Such Machine in Possession, or Delivering Such Machine to Any Person . . . , ch. 96, §§ 1–3.

23 ¹⁸⁸ For example, this small item appeared in the Bangor 24 (Maine) Daily Whig on October 27, 1870: "A burglar while 25 attempting to break into a shop in New York, Monday night, had the top of his head blown off by a trap-gun so placed that it would be discharged by any one tampering with the window. A few such 'accidents' are needed to teach the thieves who have lately been operating in this city, a lesson."

26 ¹⁸⁹ This is my observation based on my reading of historic 27 newspaper accounts from the late 1800s, and from the number of 28 anti-trap gun laws enacted. As policing became more consistent, professional, and reliable, support for vigilante-type actions like setting trap guns seems to have declined.

1 provides an example where a burglar was killed by a gun-trap set 2 by a shopkeeper, who was then prosecuted: "As there is a statute 3 against the use of such infernal machines, which might cause loss 4 of life to some innocent person, the jury censured Agostino."
5 After the verdict the man continued to be held under $2,000
6 bail.¹⁹⁰

7 74. Inevitably, however, the traps sometimes wound up 8 hurting or killing innocents, even including the person who set 9 the trap. For example, this 1891 newspaper account from 10 Chillicothe, Missouri illustrated the problem: "George Dowell, a 11 young farmer, was fined $50 under an old law for setting a trap-12 gun. Dowell set the gun in his corn-crib to catch a thief, but 13 his wife was the first person to visit the crib and on opening 14 the door was shot dead."¹⁹¹

15 75. In all, at least 16 states had anti-trap gun laws (see 16 Exhibits B and F). The earliest such law encountered was the 17 1771 New Jersey law (above). Nine laws were enacted in the 18 1700s-1800s, and 9 in the early 1900s (counting states that 19 enacted multiple laws across the centuries).

20 IV. CONCLUSION

21 76. What does the law say, and what should the law be, 22 regarding the regulation of firearms and other harmful or 23 dangerous weapons and accessories, in the light of the Supreme 24 Court's ruling in the Bruen decision? Given the importance of 1 history, especially, though not limited to, the founding era and 2 the Reconstruction era, the lesson is abundantly clear. Firearms 3 and other dangerous weapons were subject to remarkably strict, 4 consistent, and wide-ranging regulation throughout our history 5 when they entered society, proliferated, and resulted in 6 violence, harm, or contributed to criminality. This historical 7 record from the 1600s through the early twentieth century, as 8 seen in the examples examined here, is even more remarkable given 9 that the United States was an evolving and developing nation-10 state that could not claim to have reached maturity until the 11 twentieth century. The historical record summarized here makes 12 clear that contemporary restrictions among the states pertaining 13 to assault weapons and large capacity ammunition magazines are 14 merely the latest iteration of a centuries-long tradition of 15 weapons regulations and restrictions. Gun ownership is as old as 16 the country. But so are gun and other dangerous weapons laws, 17 which have adapted to changes in threats to public safety.

18 Pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1746, I declare under penalty of 19 perjury under the laws of the United States of America that the 20 foregoing is true and correct.

From the N. Y. Standard, Oct. 20th.

Coroner FLYNN and the jury previously impanelled yesterday morning concluded the inquest on the body of GEORGE TWEEDLE, the burglar, who was shot by the trap-gun in the shop of JOSEPH J. AGOSTINO, at No. 301 East Twenty-third street, on Wednesday morning. AGOSTINO and many of his friends were present, and some few of the intimates of the deceased also looked on with interest. The first and only witness examined was Officer OLIVER WINSHIP, of the Eighteenth Precinct. He testified that early that morning, before seven o'clock, he was informed that the body of a man was lying in the back-yard of AGOSTINO'S gun-shop. He went there and found the body as described. The hat, shown to the jury, he identified as the one found lying beside the body, having evidently been worn by the burglar. It was a round black felt hat, and its tattered and riddled appearance showed how terrible must have been the charge in the weapon. It was filled with little holes made by small shot, and the whole top had been blown open. The chisel and piece of stick were also shown. The officer found a hole in one of the shutters of the rear window, which looked as if an attempt had been made to pry it open. A Springfield musket was fastened to the sill, inside, with the muzzle three inches from the shutter. The other end of the barrel rested on a block of wood, and one end of a string was tied to the hammer, passed over a small pulley, and the other end fastened to the shutter, so that, on opening the latter, the discharge would follow.

Nothing further was elicited from this witness, and the case was here rested, there being no more testimony. The jury retired, and in a short time returned with a verdict setting forth the cause of death to have been a musket shot wound from a weapon placed as a trap by JOSEPH D. AGOSTINO. As there is a statute against the use of such infernal machines, which might cause loss of life to some innocent person, the jury censured AGOSTINO. He will not be released, however, but will be held under $2,000 bail.

HOW JUDGE BAWLING CAUGHT

Shot by a Trap-Gun.
CHILLICOTHE, Mo., Feb. 11.— In the circuit court George Dowell, a young farmer, was fined $50 under an old law for setting a trap-gun. Dowell set the gun in his corn-crib to catch a thief, but his wife was the first person to visit the crib and on opening the door was shot dead.
