1 INTRODUCTION

2 California Rifle & Pistol Association, Incorporated (“Amicus”) submits this amicus curiae
3 brief in support of Plaintiffs’ opposition to the State’s motion to dismiss their third amended 4 complaint. Amicus is one of the plaintiffs in Duncan v. Becerra, No. 17-56081, a matter pending 5 in the Southern District of California that—like this case—involves a challenge to California Penal 6 Code section 32310 on various constitutional grounds, including the Second Amendment and 7 Takings Clause. While Plaintiffs should ultimately prevail on the merits of their Second 8 Amendment and Takings Clause claims, Amicus asks the Court to deny the State’s motion to 9 dismiss because Plaintiffs have satisfied their pleading burden.

10 ARGUMENT

11 The magazines at issue are arms protected under the Second Amendment, as this Court has 12 conceded., (ECF No. 74 at 5 n.3). By completely prohibiting them, therefore, section 32310 13 violates the Second Amendment. For, as the Supreme Court has acknowledged, bans on protected 14 activity cannot survive any level of constitutional scrutiny. District of Columbia v. Heller, 554 15 U.S. 570, 628 (2008). That doctrinal truism is enough to resolve this matter in Plaintiffs’ favor.
16 But, even setting aside the merits question, a Federal Rule of Civil Procedure Rule 12(b)(6) motion 17 is simply not the proper procedural vehicle to dispose of this matter. Such motions should only be 18 granted where “the plaintiffs’ complaint fails to ‘state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.’ 19 ” Zucco Partners, LLC v. Digimarc Corp., 552 F.3d 981, 989 (9th Cir. 2009) (quoting Bell Atl.
20 Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570 (2007)). In making that assessment, courts may generally 21 look “only to the face of the complaint and exhibits attached to, or incorporated by reference into, 22 the complaint.” Van Buskirk v. Cable News Network, Inc., 284 F.3d 977, 980 (9th Cir. 2002). All 23 factual allegations set forth in the complaint “are taken as true and construed in the light most 24 favorable to [p]laintiffs.” Epstein v. Wash. Energy Co., 83 F.3d 1136, 1140 (9th Cir. 1996).
25 Plaintiffs’ third amended complaint states a valid Second Amendment claim; one the Ninth Circuit 26 has recognized on two separate occasions. Fyock v. City of Sunnyvale, 779 F.3d 991 (9th Cir.
27 2015); Duncan v. Becerra, 742 Fed. Appx. 218 (9th Cir. 2018). The complaint also states a valid 28 Takings Clause claim, which the Ninth Circuit likewise recognized on one of those occasions.

1 Duncan, 742 Fed. Appx. 218.

2 To be sure, neither of those Ninth Circuit rulings binds this Court to rule in Plaintiffs' favor 3 on the merits. But one (Fyock) precludes it from granting the State's motion to dismiss. The other 4 (Duncan) is at great odds with such a prospect—having affirmed the issuance of a preliminary 5 injunction based on the very claims the State seeks to dismiss. Duncan, 742 Fed. Appx. At 221-
6 222. In all events, the analysis this Court itself identified as applicable to evaluating section 32310 7 is incompatible with dismissal; specifically, that “California’s stated interest of reducing the 8 incidence and harm of mass shootings ‘would be achieved less effectively absent the regulation.’” 9 (ECF No. 74 p. 9:23-24). Whether that interest would be less effectively achieved absent section 10 32310 necessarily requires the State to make an evidentiary showing to meet its burden under 11 heightened scrutiny. Because the State cannot make that showing on a motion to dismiss—as it 12 goes beyond the corners of the complaint and the State fails to cite judicially noticeable evidence 13 to meet its burden—dismissal is inappropriate.

14 Respectfully, this Court erred in granting the State’s previous motion to dismiss by not 15 holding the State to its evidentiary burden and ignoring the Fyock court’s recognition of a viable 16 Second Amendment claim. The State now invites this Court to repeat that error. Rather than 17 marshalling evidence purporting to justify section 32310, the State merely points to a supposed 18 consensus of other circuit court decisions upholding “large capacity magazine” (“LCM”) 19 restrictions in the face of similar challenges, as the basis for granting its motion. Those non-20 binding decisions are of little, if any, relevance here. Only one involves a Takings Clause claim, 21 belying the State’s assertion of a consensus on the constitutionality of LCM restrictions. (ECF No.
22 95 p. 12:3-4). More importantly, none of those cases was decided on a motion to dismiss.¹ In fact, 23 the State is the only government defendant in the entire country—out of several—that has even 24 brought a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to test the validity of a constitutional challenge to an LCM

25
27
28 ¹ Ass’n of N.J. Rifle and Pistol Clubs, Inc. v. Attorney General N.J., 910 F.3d 106 (3rd Cir. 2018) (motion for preliminary injunction); Kolbe v. Hogan, 813 F.3d 160 (4th Cir. 2016) (motion for summary judgment); N.Y. State Rifle and Pistol Ass’n, Inc. v. Cuomo, 804 F.3d 242, (2nd Cir. 2015), cert denied (motion for summary judgment); Friedman v. City of Highland Park, 784 F.3d 406 (2015) (motion for summary judgment); Heller v. District of Columbia, 670 F.3d 1244 (D.C. Cir. 2011) (motion for summary judgment).

1 restriction.² Indeed, the State brought no motion to dismiss in Amicus’s case challenging exactly 2 the same law on identical legal theories. Duncan, 742 Fed. Appx. 218.

3 This Court should thus decline the State’s disingenuous invitation to ignore binding 4 precedent and become the extreme outlier on this issue—especially given that the Ninth Circuit 5 upheld the preliminary injunction against the enforcement of section 32310 in Duncan after this 6 Court’s previous ruling. What’s more, the Ninth Circuit’s affirmance of the extraordinary remedy 7 of preliminary injunctive relief on essentially identical claims as Plaintiffs’ confirms they have, at 8 least, stated valid claims. Accordingly, this Court should deny the State’s motion to dismiss.

9 I. PLAINTIFFS HAVE STATED A VALID SECOND AMENDMENT CLAIM SUFFICIENT TO 10 SURVIVE A MOTION TO DISMISS

11 A. Fyock Recognizes that Plaintiffs’ Second Amendment Claim Is Valid; As 12 Binding Precedent, It Compels the Court to Deny the State’s Motion to Dismiss

13 While the Fyock court affirmed the district court’s denial of a preliminary injunction to 14 prevent an effectively identical LCM restriction to the one at issue from taking effect, in doing so 15 it necessarily recognized that the Second Amendment claim against the restriction was valid. 779 16 F.3d at 996-97. The court described as its “task to determine only whether the district court 17 correctly distilled the applicable rules of law . . .” Id. at 995. That entailed the Court reviewing all 18 the district court ruling’s “underlying legal principles de novo.” Id.

19 Of critical relevance here is that, in determining the applicable law, the Fyock court did not 20 simply find that the plaintiffs had failed to state a valid claim. To the contrary, the court described 21 what it was evaluating as a “Second Amendment claim” that required analysis. Id. at 996. In fact, 22 while it was affirming the preliminary injunction denial, the Fyock court was careful to note that it 23 was not ruling on the merits and laid out some potential evidentiary issues that might arise at the 24 merits stage, stating:

25 At this early, preliminary injunction stage, however, we do not find it necessary to 26 independently undertake a historical analysis that was unavailable to the district 27 court due to an undeveloped record. As the merits action proceeds and the parties 28 develop the record, the district court will be able to adequately assess the historical roots and implications of firing-capacity regulations.

² In addition to Fyock and those cases listed in footnote 1, see also S.F. Veteran Police Officers Ass’n, v. City and Cty. of San Francisco, 18 F. Supp. 997 (N.D. Cal. 2014).

1 Id. at 998 n.4; see also id. at 997 (noting that the district court could have found that the Second
2 Amendment does not protect LCMs had the government provided evidence of longstanding LCM 3 restrictions, but that it could not do so on the record before it).

4 These observations show that the Fyock court recognized, although implicitly, a valid 5 Second Amendment claim against LCM possession restrictions. As binding precedent here, it 6 precludes this Court from second-guessing that determination and, by extension, precludes 7 granting the State’s motion.

8 9 B. Because the State Cannot Meet Its Evidentiary Burden to Prevail at the Pleading Stage, the Court Cannot Grant Its Motion to Dismiss

10 Even if Fyock did not bind this Court to deny the State’s motion to dismiss, applicable 11 scrutiny does. This Court has already held that section 32310 burdens conduct protected by the 12 Second Amendment. (ECF No. 74 at 5 n.3.) That finding alone entitles Plaintiffs to proceed past 13 the pleading stage. For, once the Court makes that determination, it must apply heightened 14 scrutiny. United States v. Chovan, 735 F.3d 1127, 1136-37 (9th Cir. 2013). And even if mere 15 intermediate scrutiny applies—which Amicus does not concede—the burden remains on the State 16 to justify the challenged law. See, e.g., R.A.V. v. City of St. Paul, 505 U.S. 377, 382 (1992) 17 (holding that content-based speech regulations are presumptively invalid). That “burden is not 18 satisfied by mere speculation or conjecture.” Lorillard Tobacco Co. v. Reilly, 533 U.S. 525, 555 19 (2001). The state instead must establish that its chosen restriction “will in fact alleviate” the 20 “harms it recites.” Id. It must also show that the law is “closely drawn” to achieve its interest in a 21 way that “avoid[s] unnecessary abridgement” of constitutionally protected conduct. McCutcheon v.
22 Fed. Election Comm’n, 572 U.S. 185, 196-200. And, contrary to this Court’s previous ruling, the 23 Court does not owe the State any deference on whether section 32310 is so tailored. Turner Broad.
24 Sys., Inc. v. F.C.C., 520 U.S. 180, 214 (1997). That is a burden the State has not met and cannot 25 meet, at least not in a Rule 12(b)(6) motion.

26 First, section 32310 directly targets the lawful possession of magazines capable of holding 27 over ten rounds in hopes that reducing their availability to law-abiding citizens will reduce their 28 availability to mass shooters. The target of section 32310, then, is not, as the State contends,

1 simply the statistically rare mass shooting, but the mere possession of constitutionally protected
2 arms by the law-abiding. The State’s rationale, while conceptually logical, is simply out of step 3 with the respect due fundamental rights. The Supreme Court has a long history of rejecting the 4 notion that governments may ban constitutionally protected activity simply because such activity 5 could lead to abuses. Indeed, a quintessential example is Heller, in which the District of Columbia 6 tried to justify its handgun ban by claiming handguns were involved in most firearm-related 7 homicides in the United States. Heller, 554 U.S. at 696 (Breyer, J., dissenting) (collecting 8 statistics). Despite the District’s compelling interest in preventing homicides, the Supreme Court 9 held that a ban on possession of those protected arms by law-abiding citizens lacks the required fit 10 to that goal “[u]nder any of the standards of scrutiny.” Id. at 628- 29 (majority opinion). For this 11 reason alone, the Court should deny the State’s motion to dismiss and Plaintiffs should ultimately 12 prevail.

13 But even if the Court disagrees with that premise, it must still hold the State to its 14 evidentiary burden under heightened scrutiny. Meeting that burden requires the State to establish 15 that section 32310 “will in fact alleviate” the “harms [the State] recites,” rather than relying on 16 “mere speculation or conjecture.” Lorillard Tobacco Co., 533 U.S. at 555. The State cannot make 17 that evidence-based showing at the pleadings stage, absent binding precedent resolving the 18 analysis in the State’s favor. No such precedent exists here.

19 For these reasons, this Court erred when it ruled that “California’s stated interest of 20 reducing the incidence and harm of mass shootings ‘would be achieved less effectively absent the 21 regulation,’ ” apparently because “courts give substantial deference to the predictive judgments” of 22 the voters who believed section 32310 would achieve that goal. (ECF No. 74 at 9:21-25.) This 23 level of legislative deference is inappropriate at any stage, but particularly at the pleadings stage.

24 While it is not the role of a court to replace the considered judgment of the legislature with 25 its own, that does not mean it must (or even should) rubber stamp whatever the legislature decrees.
26 That would be rational basis review, masquerading as intermediate scrutiny. It is thus ultimately 27 the Court’s role to “assure that, in formulating its judgments, [the legislature] has drawn 28 reasonable inferences based on substantial evidence.” Turner Broad. Sys. v. FCC, 512 U.S. 622,

1 666 (1994); see also Kachalsky v. County of Westchester, 701 F.3d 81, 97 (2d Cir. 2012). This 2 requires courts to consider carefully the government’s evidence and make an independent 3 judgment about the reasonableness of the inferences drawn from it. But making that call inevitably 4 requires the Court to look beyond the pleadings, or at a minimum, fail to construe Plaintiffs’
5 allegations as true, neither of which is permissible at this stage. Epstein, 83 F.3d 1140. And, in all 6 events, the State has proffered no admissible evidence in support of its motion that could even 7 conceivably meet its burden at any stage.

8 The State improperly relies on Mahoney v. Sessions, 871 F.3d 883 (9th Cir. 2017) and 9 Wilson v. Lynch, 835 F.3d 1083, 1095 (9th Cir. 2016). (ECF No. 95 p. 14:18-26). Those cases do 10 not apply because the Mahoney complaint contained an admission negating the plaintiffs’ claim 11 regardless of evidence (i.e., that the challenged policy expressly allowed for self-defense), 12 Mahoney, 871 F.3d 881, and the Wilson plaintiffs did not dispute the evidence relied on by the 13 government there, Wilson, 835 F.3d 1093. Neither set of facts are present here, where the Plaintiffs 14 have plainly pleaded an injury and dispute the State’s evidence. (ECF No. 76 at 20, ¶¶66; ECF No.
15 98 at 10-16.)

16 In sum, this Court should reconsider its previous analysis, find that Plaintiffs have indeed 17 stated a claim under the Second Amendment, and deny the State’s motion to dismiss that claim.

18 II. PLAINTIFFS HAVE STATED A VALID TAKINGS CLAUSE CLAIM

19 In ruling on the State’s previous motion to dismiss, this Court held that because there were 20 “alternatives to turning the magazines over to law enforcement,” such as selling them, taking them 21 out of state, or permanently altering them, the plaintiffs “[did] not plausibly allege that the ban 22 operates as government appropriation of private property for government or public use.” (ECF No.
23 74 at 12:1-6.) That section 32310 provides those alternatives to surrendering LCMs does not save 24 it from exacting a physical taking.

25 The State does not seriously dispute that requiring plaintiffs to surrender an LCM to the 26 government for destruction, Cal. Penal Code § 32310(d)(3), results in a physical taking. That 27 conclusion is obvious, as relinquishing both title and possession of the magazines forfeits “the 28 entire ‘bundle’ of property rights” in the property. Horne v. Dep’t of Agric., __ U.S. __, 135 S. Ct.

1 2419, 2428 (2015). The State instead argues that the law does not amount to a physical taking 2 because it also allows citizens to surrender their property to persons or places other than the 3 government, or destroy it altogether: Plaintiffs may sell the magazines to a firearms dealer, move 4 them to another state, or permanently alter the magazines so that they cannot hold more than 10 5 rounds. (ECF No. 16 at 12-15 (citing Cal. Penal Code § 32310(d).) But none of those options 6 renders the law anything but a physical taking.

7 The first option—forcing Plaintiffs to sell their property—is no less a taking than if the 8 government seized it. The essence of a taking is the dispossession of property from the owner.
9 Whether the government edict forces the owner to hand the property over to the government or to a 10 third party, there is still a taking. Thus, in the landmark Kelo case, it made no difference to the 11 Court’s analysis that the law allowed Kelo to sell her property to a “private nonprofit entity.” Kelo 12 v. City of New London, 545 U.S. 469, 473-75 (2005). Instead, as the Ninth Circuit has emphasized, 13 “it is sufficient” that the law “involves a direct interference with or disturbance of property rights,” 14 even if the government itself does not “directly appropriate the title, possession or use of the 15 propert[y].” Richmond Elks Hall Ass’n v. Richmond Redevel. Agency, 561 F.2d 1327, 1330 (9th 16 Cir. 1977). At a minimum, forcing citizens to sell their property places an unconstitutional 17 condition on the possession of their property, which effects an unconstitutional taking. See Koontz 18 v. St. Johns River Water Mgmt. Dist., 133 S. Ct. 2586, 2595-96 (2013).

19 The second option—moving the property out of California to another state—fares no 20 better. Like a mandatory sale to a third party or surrender to the government, a mandatory transfer 21 of property out of state, often away from the owner’s primary home, involves “a direct interference 22 with or disturbance of” the owner’s right to the property. Richmond Redevel. Agency, 561 F.2d at 23 1330. It is no answer that citizens can possess their property in another state. As California itself 24 has recognized, “each State bears an independent obligation to ensure that its regulations do not 25 infringe the constitutional rights of persons within its borders.” Amicus Brief for the States of 26 N.Y., Cal., et al., at 20, Whole Woman’s Health v. Hellerstedt, 136 S. Ct. 2292 (2016). California 27 cannot invoke the permissive laws of another state to validate its own unconstitutional restriction.
28 See Jackson, 746 F.3d at 967 (“That Jackson may easily purchase ammunition elsewhere is

1 irrelevant.”); cf. Whole Woman’s Health, 136 S. Ct. at 2304, 2312 (the availability of abortion 2 services in a nearby state did not cure constitutional violation).

3 The third option—permanently altering the magazines to accept fewer than ten rounds—4 cannot be squared with Supreme Court takings precedents either. (ECF 12 at 71.) In Horne, for 5 example, the raisin growers could have “plant[ed] different crops,” or “[sold] their raisin-variety 6 grapes as table grapes or for use in juice or wine.” 135 S. Ct. at 2430. Likewise, in Loretto, the 7 property owner could have converted her building into something other than an apartment 8 complex. See Loretto v. Teleprompter Manhattan CATV Corp., 458 U.S. 419, 439 n.17. The 9 Supreme Court rejected those arguments in both cases, admonishing that “property rights ‘cannot 10 be so easily manipulated.’” Horne, 135 S. Ct. at 2430 (quoting Loretto, 458 U.S. at 439 n.17).

11 A Ninth Circuit panel considered the above Takings Clause analysis and described it as 12 “outlin[ing] the correct legal principles.” Duncan, 742 Fed. Appx. at 222. The panel explained that 13 in Duncan, “the district court did not exceed its discretion by concluding (1) that the three options 14 provided in section 32310(d) (surrender, removal, or sale) fundamentally ‘deprive Plaintiffs not 15 just of the use of their property, but of possession, one of the most essential sticks in the bundle of 16 property rights’; and (2) that California could not use the police power to avoid compensation.” Id.
17 (quoting Lucas v. S.C. Coastal Council, 505 U.S. 1003, 1020-29; Loretto, 458 U.S. 426).

18 In sum, this Court should reconsider its previous analysis, find that Plaintiffs have indeed 19 stated a claim under the Takings Clause, and deny the State’s motion to dismiss that claim.

20 III. THE STATE’S MOTION WILL BE MOOT UPON A RULING IN THE DUNCAN MATTER

21 Amicus and its fellow plaintiffs have filed and fully briefed a Rule 56 motion in the 22 Duncan matter. Pls. Mot. Summ. J., Duncan v. Becerra, No. 17-56081 (S.D. Cal. Mar. 5, 2018), 23 ECF No. 50. The Honorable Judge Benitez heard that motion and ordered the parties to provide 24 additional briefing, which was completed on June 11, 2018. Min. Entry, Duncan v. Becerra, No.
25 17-56081 (S.D. Cal. May 10, 2018), ECF No. 60; Pls.’ Court Ordered Suppl. Br. Supp. Mot.
26 Summ. J, Duncan v. Becerra, No. 17-01017 (S.D. Cal. June 6, 2018), ECF No. 63; Def.’s Resp. to 27 Pls.’ Suppl. Br., Duncan v. Becerra, No. 17-01017 (S.D. Cal. June 21, 2018), ECF No. 64. There 28 has yet to be a ruling on the Duncan plaintiffs’ motion, but Amicus expects a ruling any day.

1 So even if this Court disagrees with Amicus’s arguments stated above, if Judge Benitez 2 grants Amicus’s summary judgment motion in Duncan, this Court should still deny the State’s 3 motion to dismiss as moot because at that point this Court would be rendered unable to grant 4 effectual relief. See Rocky Mountain Farmers Union v. Corey, 730 F.3d 1070 (9th Cir. 2013), 5 reh’g en banc denied. Indeed, if the Duncan court permanently enjoins section 32310(c), there 6 would no longer be a justiciable controversy. See Lazaro Ass’n, Inc. v Connell, 286 F.3d 1088, 7 1095 (9th Cir. 2002). For Plaintiffs would enjoy the relief they seek, and the State could defend the 8 challenged law’s constitutionality by appealing the adverse ruling in Duncan. In other words, at 9 that point, Plaintiffs would lack standing because their alleged injury abated, and the State’s 10 motion to dismiss would be moot and thus become an improper request for an advisory opinion.
11 See Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 606 n.4. As a result, the only appropriate step for 12 this Court to take in that situation would be to deny the motion as moot.

13 CONCLUSION

14 For the reasons stated above, Amicus asks this Court to deny the State’s motion to dismiss 15 Plaintiffs’ Second Amendment and Takings Clause claims.
