DECLARATION OF MICHAEL KEVANE

I, Michael Kevane, declare under penalty of perjury that the following is true and correct:

1. I have been retained by the Office of the Attorney General of the California Department of Justice to provide expert opinion and testimony regarding the history of public libraries in America. Specifically, I have been asked to opine regarding the state of the public library system in America during the Founding era (in and around the year 1791) and the Reconstruction era (in and around the year 1868), as well as the purposes served by, and the justifications for, public libraries during these two historical periods.

2. This declaration is based on my own personal knowledge and experience, and if I am called to testify as a witness, I could and would testify competently to the truth of the matters discussed in this declaration.

BACKGROUND AND QUALIFICATIONS

3. I am a Professor of Economics at Santa Clara University’s Leavey School of Business. I received my Ph.D. from the University of California, Berkeley, in 1993. My expertise includes analysis of the spread of public libraries in the United States in the 1800s. My scholarship on this topic includes an article entitled “The Development of Public Libraries in the United States, 1870-1930: A Quantitative Assessment,” (co-authored with Prof. William Sundstrom) which was published in Information and Culture: A Journal of History in 2014, as well as a two working papers “State Promotion of Local Public Goods: The Case of Public Libraries” (co-authored with Prof. William Sundstrom) and “America’s public libraries and political participation, 1870-1930” (co-authored with Prof. William Sundstrom). A true and correct copy of my current curriculum vitae is attached as Exhibit 1 to this declaration.

RETENTION AND COMPENSATION

4. I am being compensated for services performed in the above-entitled case at an hourly rate of $150. My compensation is not contingent on the results of my analysis or the substance of any testimony.

SOURCES OF EVIDENCE

5. Since the early years of establishment of association, social, and public libraries, Americans were writing and publishing opinions and interpretations of the institutions: what their purpose was, how they did and should function; what effects they might have, and what public policy should be to promote and regulate libraries. In the mid-1800s, a new profession of librarian emerged, leading to the establishment in 1876 of a professional association, the American Library Association, and regular publications of scholarship and professional opinion about libraries, such as The Library Journal (first published in 1877). Universities established schools of library science, and faculty teaching in those departments published extensively. Increasingly professionalized librarians wrote annual reports, full of commentary and statistics on library performance and issues, and quite commonly these librarians drew on their library archives to write on the origins and history of the libraries in which they served.

6. There are now hundreds of individual monographs that provide histories of libraries and the public library movement, and comment on their character.

7. The collection of monographs, both contemporaneous and produced on the basis of examination of archives and other memories of the past, are incomplete. Many libraries were destroyed in the frequent fires that consumed American cities and towns. Libraries closed, for many reasons, and their archives were stored away and forgotten. Librarians wrote about the things that interested them, and not about what might be of interest to researchers in 2023. Researchers themselves may fail to understand the context of the records that they examine, and misinterpret them. For

1 these reasons, interpretation of the purposes and justifications of librarians in early 2 America should be viewed as provisional, rather than as definitive.

3 GENERAL OVERVIEW OF LIBRARIES IN THE 1731-1875 PERIOD

4 8. Public libraries in the early United States evolved gradually from 5 being similar to exclusive clubs, to being open to subscribers at modest fees, to 6 being subsidized by philanthropists and open to the public, to finally being tax-
7 supported free libraries open to the general public. The different forms of libraries 8 often overlapped, and libraries sometimes started as one form and morphed or 9 merged into an institution having a different form.

10 9. Benjamin Franklin is commonly credited with establishing the first 11 shareholder library in the colonies, in 1731 in Philadelphia.<sup>1</sup> Franklin, and fellow 12 members of a social debating club, that they called the Junto, established the 13 Library Company for the purpose of sharing in the costs of acquiring books. The 14 library, they felt, would aid greatly in their mission to improve their general
15 knowledge and their capabilities for reasoned debate. Like other shareholder 16 libraries that were founded in the following decades, the Library Company was 17 closed to the general public; only paid shareholders or subscribers could borrow 18 books. The Library Company and similar shareholder libraries were often located in 19 a room in a convenient shop building or home.

20 10. Through the following century, these shareholder or club libraries 21 diminished in importance and were gradually replaced by libraries that came to be 22 called, by library historians and late-19th century commentators, association 23 libraries and social libraries. Association libraries were open to members of broad-24 purpose associations, whether professional (Mechanics, Merchants), religious

1 (YMCA, YWCA), or social (Odd Fellows, Masons).<sup>2</sup> Social libraries were often 2 established and funded by prominent citizens or philanthropists. These association 3 and social libraries were likely to have reading rooms and regular opening hours, as 4 well as a paid librarian. There was no bright line between club, association, and 5 social libraries, and the historical record of their membership and usage regulations 6 remains spotty.

7 11. These privately-owned libraries typically had restrictions on access, 8 but many were open to the public, free of charge. For example, in 1792 the Library
9 Company merged with a large social library established through a bequest of James 10 Logan. The united library, comprising 55,000 volumes, was, apparently, “open to 11 every respectable person for reading or consultation every day.”<sup>3</sup>

12 12. It was not until 1833 that a government entity established the first 13 public library, defined by the two traits of being open to the general public and 14 being funded by tax revenue. This was in the town of Peterborough in New 15 Hampshire.<sup>4</sup> Other municipalities followed that example, and especially the 16 example set by Boston. The Boston Public Library was established in 1848 and 17 opened in 1854, and became the premier example of a large municipal public
18 library.<sup>5</sup> Within a few decades many major cities and towns in the United States 19 established similar public libraries. The funding arrangements for these municipal 20 and town libraries often followed a similar pattern: wealthy citizens donated to 1 cover construction costs and books, and municipalities provided land and paid the 2 salaries of employees and operating costs through tax revenues.

3 13. Because of this history and reliance on philanthropy, many public 4 libraries were structured as semi-autonomous public corporations, with boards of 5 trustees that were partly picked by the municipality, and some ex officio seats on 6 the board for municipality officials, but having some independence from city 7 government.<sup>6</sup>

8 14. Many association and social libraries donated their book collections to 9 the rapidly spreading public libraries. Starting in the 1880's, Andrew Carnegie 10 began making grants for construction of library buildings, provided the recipient 11 towns and cities passed laws that would levy taxed that would generate annual 12 revenue equivalent to 10% of the grant. A typical grant was $10,000, and so a city 13 had to have a tax levy of $1,000 per year. About 1,400 communities in the United 14 States took up the offer, and other philanthropists also increased their funding of 15 libraries. This resulted in the vast expansion of the network of public libraries in 16 America over the 1880-1920 period.<sup>7</sup>

17 LIBRARIES IN EARLY CALIFORNIA

18 15. It appears that at the founding of the State of California in 1849 there 19 were no libraries, whether public, associational, or social.<sup>8</sup> Over the next ten years, 20 several subscription, association, and social libraries were established. The 21 Monterey Library Association, established in 1849, lays claim to being the first.

22 (3): 263–69.

1           16.     Reading rooms and subscription libraries were established in 2 Sacramento and San Francisco in the early 1850s. By 1856, San Francisco 3 apparently had 15 or more subscription libraries, many of them with very modest 4 fees. The YMCA of San Francisco had established a reading room, with about 1,500
5 books, that was open to all. By 1859, a Mechanics' Institute library in the city had 6 almost 2,000 volumes. Several dozen small social libraries were established in 7 mining camps and towns in the Sierra Nevada during the 1850s.

8           17.     At the time of the comprehensive U.S. Bureau of Education survey of 9 libraries in 1875, California had only one library listed as a public library, at 10 Knight's Ferry, established in 1860.<sup>9</sup> There were 30 libraries listed as social or 11 society libraries. Of these, 8 were Odd Fellows' libraries, many of which were free 12 to the public. The other 22 were association or social libraries, mostly open only to 13 subscribers.

14           18.     California's first law enabling municipalities to establish public 15 libraries was not passed until 1878.<sup>10</sup>

16           19.     An example of how libraries evolved from social and associational 17 libraries to public libraries comes from the city of Santa Cruz.<sup>11</sup> In 1868, thirty 18 residents of the city established a Library Association and selected a board of 19 trustees. The trustees began soliciting book donations from private collections and 20 from the State of California, and drew up plans for subscription membership. The 21 library opened in 1870, in a local store. A few months later, it was moved to the 22 back of a newly opened bookstore. Then it moved to some unused rooms above a 23 drugstore. The drugstore owner's wife was appointed librarian, and she received a 24 percentage of the dues and fines. In a separate initiative, a Santa Cruz ladies group

1 established a reading room, paid for by subscribers but open to all. The Library 2 Association apparently merged with the ladies' social library in 1876, and then was 3 moved to another location above a store. In 1881 the library books were donated to 4 the City of Santa Cruz. The City appointed a board of trustees, and over the next 5 decade the nascent public library incorporated several other social and association 6 libraries, and eventually was moved to a room in City Hall. In 1894, the library was 7 moved to rooms in a nearby hotel. Eventually, a Carnegie library grant in 1904 8 permitted construction of a large building owned by the city.

9       20.     Mention should also be made of what were called school district 10 libraries. These were tax-supported libraries initiated by school districts. Very often 11 they were intended to be open to adults in the community (who typically 12 subscribed) and were not just for school children. Legislation passed in 1851 first 13 authorized their establishment, and subsequent legislation specified regulations and 14 tax rates.<sup>12</sup>

15           PURPOSES AND JUSTIFICATIONS OF PUBLIC LIBRARIES

16       21.     The record of library histories makes clear that libraries in the 1791 17 period and the 1868 period (whether club, associational, social, or, eventually, 18 public) exhibited a wide variety of characteristics. Their founders, sustainers, and 19 patrons had varied justifications for their actions, and likely varied in their stated 20 (or unstated) purposes for establishing libraries and using libraries. Despite this 21 variety, some clear patterns emerge.

22       22.     Library historians suggest that the motivations of participants in public 23 library movement that emerged in the 1850s was an amalgam of four conceptions 24 of the role of libraries: as democratic institutions promoting good citizenship; as 25 educational institutions complementing public schools (early on intended for 26 continuing adult education and self-education, but by the late 1800's increasingly

1 serving children as their main educational function); as complementing efforts to 2 inculcate what Protestant elites saw as “American” civilizational values (providing 3 an alternative to the saloon and keeping young people away from temptations of the 4 streets); and offering opportunities for self-improvement for recent immigrants.<sup>13</sup>

5 23. The education component was central. Public libraries, spreading through 6 the country starting in the 1850s, were largely conceived and promoted in the 7 context of the nation’s broader educational movement. It was the educational 8 function of libraries that provided the principal justification for public support.
9 Libraries were intended to enable workers, farmers, and inventors to improve 10 themselves by consulting trade and scientific books, and to enable citizens to better 11 engage in democratic governance, by consulting works of history, philosophy, and 12 theology.

13 24. The timing of public library expansion falls squarely in the broader 14 context of, and was linked to, the expansion of primary and secondary education.
15 By the late 19th century, most children in the country were enrolled in primary 16 school, thanks to free and compulsory elementary school movement championed by 17 Horace Mann.<sup>14</sup> Many states were approaching nearly universal primary 18 education. The high school movement gained momentum slowly in the 1890s and
